Holland Family Makes $100,000 Gift to Elon

Members of the family of the late Shirley Thomas Holland of Windsor, Va., have pledged $100,000 to Elon College in memory of their husband and father who served for more than 30 years on the college's board of trustees.

The gift comes as part of the college's $5.7 million PRIDE II campaign. In recognition of the gift, the Elon Board of Trustees executive committee has voted to name the president's home "Holland House."

Those of the Holland family participating in the memorial gift are Mrs. Holland and sons, Dr. Clarence A. Holland of Virginia Beach, Va.; Dr. William E. Holland of Midlothian, Va., and Sen. Richard J. Holland of Windsor. The funds will be used for capital unrestricted expenditures as a part of the PRIDE II campaign.

Funds raised in the campaign will go to the college's endowment scholarships and physical plant improvements including a new fine arts classroom building.

The late Mr. Holland served as a trustee emeritus of the college from 1946 until the time of his death in May 1983. He was a student at the college prior to World War I. Mr. Holland was a leading businessman in Windsor. He helped organize the Farmers Bank of Windsor in 1919 and served as chief executive until 1968 when his son, Richard J. Holland, was elected president. The elder Holland then continued to serve as chairman of the bank's board of directors. He also was president of the Shirley T. Holland Insurance Agency and served on the Windsor Town Council.

Mr. Holland was veteran of two decades of service in the Virginia House of Delegates, representing Isle of Wight and Nansemond counties and Suffolk in the legislature. He was chairman of the House Insurance and Banking Committee and sponsored a number of major banking bills during his tenure.

He also introduced the bill that created the Virginia Industrial Development Corp. and served as secretary and director of the corporation. Another of his bills enables state employees, including teachers, to retire at age 60.

After leaving the legislature in 1966, Mr. Holland was appointed by Gov. Mills E. Godwin, Jr. to do legislative liason work during the General Assembly sessions. He was credited by Governor Godwin with being instrumental in upgrading public education, creating the community college system and in getting the state retail sales tax bill passed.

"Few persons have given more of themselves to Elon College than Shirley Holland," said President Fred Young. "In addition to his leadership, he had the longest record of annual giving to the college, having contributed every year since records were kept. We are pleased to have this visible tribute to Shirley Holland on the Elon Campus."

Elon Tuition Remains Low

While the cost of a private college education continues to increase in North Carolina, Elon College has managed to keep tuition low. A recent comparison among 18 similar colleges and universities in N.C. shows Elon to be third from the bottom in tuition and fees.

The figures come from a recent issue of "The Chronicle of Higher Education" and were collected by the College Board for a survey, " The College Cost Book, 1984-85." Most colleges and universities in the state participated in the survey.

Elon's tuition and fees of $3,290 for the 1984-85 school year ranked just above those of two other N.C. colleges when compared with private, coeducational, four-year, predominantly white institutions. Fifteen similar colleges and universities in the state charged higher tuition and fees than Elon.

The figures range from a low of $2,800 to a high of $7,681. Elon's cost of $3,290 is well below the average cost of $4,442. All North Carolina residents receive a $750 legislative tuition grant, reducing Elon's tuition for in-state students to $2,540.

Elon College President Fred Young said the college maintains a low tuition through two primary programs - a cost consciousness on the part of all Elon employees and an aggressive fund- raising plan.

"First, and most important, Elon College has maintained a balanced budget for over 20 years," Young said, "by making a conscientious effort to keep expenses as low as possible. Our faculty and staff work hard to make Elon affordable.

Smile when you say Elon! The 1985 Elon Phonathon was a success as alumni, parents and friends made pledges in record numbers. Alumni responded enthusiastically to the "Let's Beat Davidson and Wake Forest Challenge," and, if all pledges are paid, Elon may well become the leader among the state's private colleges in alumni participation. Pledges are due May 1, 1985.

"Second, Elon's Development Office raises over $3 million a year, about a fourth of the $12 million budget at the college. These outside funds, from alumni, businesses and other groups, allow students to receive a college education for about three-fourths of the actual cost," Young noted.

Contributions to the college have made possible several improvements in the beautification of the 150-acre campus in the past few years. Most of these projects have been completed through the generosity of individuals in the Elon College community and alumni from throughout the nation.

"We have found that an environment conducive to learning attracts students and builds pride in the institution," Young said.

Elon's successes have not been without problems. With 2,800 students, the coeducational college has the third largest private undergraduate enrollment in the state. The growth has created overcrowding, and six new residence halls have been constructed in the past three years, a time when other colleges are struggling to maintain enrollments.

Even with the new dorms, the college began the year with dozens of students in a local motel, although most overcrowding in rooms was eliminated.

As word of Elon's academic reputation and low tuition spreads, the number of applications increases. In Virginia, for instance, where Elon's academic reputation and low costs are well known among high school students, more students who left the state attended Elon than any other college in the nation.

Earlier this year, the admission requirements were increased for the first time in several years, and already applications for next year are ahead at the college, which has rejected more students for next year than it had this time last year.

"We're not complaining," Young pointed out. "These are problems many schools would like to have. But they are not without a cost."

A part of that cost is a faculty that is overburdened and some classes larger than school officials would like.

"Still, we find on surveys that 97 percent of our graduates list a close mentor relationship with a faculty member as the thing they like best about Elon College. We're very proud of that, and we want to continue offering personalized attention at a reasonable price."

Duncans Endow Scholarship

William H. and Kathryn M. Duncan, of Greensboro, N.C., have established an endowed scholarship at Elon College to aid visually-impaired students. The Duncan Scholarship Fund will be restricted to deserving students who are legally blind or are low vision patients.

New Majors Added

Elon Enters Television Age

A new major in Mass Communication, which will prepare students for careers in radio and television, has been added to the Elon College curriculum. The faculty approved the new program in February and at the same time approved a major in Journalism to replace the existing English/Journalism major.

The new Mass Communication major is made possible by the recent addition of a television production studio on the first floor of Moore Building and the purchase of television equipment. The college already has a campus radio station, WSOE-FM, which was increased to 500 watts last year.

According to Dr. Chris White, vice president for academic and student affairs, Elon first began building a television program in the summer of 1984 after Cablevision of Alamance approached the college with a proposal to lay cable for an internal campus television channel and asking the college to provide programming for the local access cablevision channel. At that time W. Ray Johnson was hired as coordinator of television services and communication, and basic television equipment was acquired.

Beginning in the fall semester Johnson and a group of interested students produced a weekly cablevision show entitled "Elon in Review" which is shown over the Alamance and Guilford county local access channels. In January, more equipment was purchased and the Mooney videotaping classroom was converted into a television production studio. Johnson and Gerald Gibson, assistant professor of communications, are currently using the studio to teach Elon's first production course.

"Elon now has video facilities equivalent to that of most small television studios and many larger institutions," said Johnson. "And we have some added advantages.

"At most larger universities the students never get to touch the sophisticated equipment. That privilege is reserved for graduate students and professors only. Our students will get to use everything.

"Also, in most other schools, even in graduate programs, the tapes that are created are never seen by anyone other than the class and the professor. We will have the ability to cablecast live from the studio, Whitley Auditorium, Alumni Gymnasium and the new fine arts center, and our programs will actually be seen by an audience either over the campus channel or the local access channel."

Meiselman Gives Land To Elon

A Charlotte businessman has contributed a gift of real estate valued at $235,000 to the Elon College PRIDE II campaign. The donation came as a result of a suggestion by an alumnus living in Jacksonville, Fla.

The businessman who made the gift, one of the major donations to the Elon PRIDE II campaign, is Ira S. Meiselman, 42-year-old president of Eastern Federal Corp. Eastern Federal operates approximately 100 theaters in the southeastern United States.

The Elon alumnus who influenced Mr. Meiselman to make the gift is William H. Maness, class of 1938, and an attorney and partner in the firm of Maness and Kachergus of Jacksonville, Fla.

"We have identified a number of land parcels over the last few years that we felt would make suitable gifts," Mr. Meiselman explained. "One of these was the site in Jacksonville. Our firm has been represented by Bill Maness over a period of years. When discussion arose concerning several parcels of land, including the one in Jacksonville, and possible theaters were mentioned, including the City of Jacksonville, Bill Maness lobbied for Elon in a friendly but persistent manner. We are pleased to make the donation to Elon."

Mr. Meiselman, a native of Fayetteville who has lived in Charlotte most of his life, is a graduate of the Wharton School of Business of the University of Pennsylvania. His wife Jenny is a graduate of Duke University with a master's degree and a doctorate from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. She is a licensed practicing psychologist. The couple has two children.

"Loyal alumni like Bill Maness and generous benefactors like Ira Meiselman are two of the chief reasons Elon can continually upgrade the quality of its program," said President Fred Young. "We are grateful to both these men for this gift."

Francis Named To Dean's Post

Dr. Gerald L. Francis, former professor of mathematics, has been named dean of academic affairs at Elon College.

Dr. Francis has served as associate dean of academic affairs since June, 1983. As dean he will be responsible to the vice president for academic and student affairs for the supervision and development of the academic program of the college.

"Dr. Francis has done an excellent job as professor, department chairman, and associate dean," said Vice President Chris White. "He has tremendous support from the faculty and I am convinced that this appointment will be a positive step for Elon College."

Dr. Francis, a native of the Washington, D.C. area, graduated from Appalachian State University. He received his master's degree from ASU and his Ph.D. degree from Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University.

Before joining the Elon faculty in 1974, Dr. Francis taught in the Virginia public school system and at ASU. From 1978-84 he served as chairman of the Elon Math Department and was instrumental in the formation of the Computer Information Science Program.

BI Foundation Gives To PRIDE

Burlington Industries Foundation has pledged $50,000 to the Elon College PRIDE II Campaign, college officials have announced. The funds will be used toward the construction of the proposed fine arts center.

"We are cognizant of the fine work being done at Elon and the large number of employees' children who have benefited from the college and its services over recent years," said Park R. Davidson, executive director of the foundation.

The fine arts center will be constructed on Williamson Avenue near the site of the present track. A new all-weather track and soccer field have been built on the northern end of the campus near the Koury Field House.

"This grant from the Burlington Industries Foundation will go a long way towards helping Elon College provide this needed addition to our fine arts program," Elon College President Fred Young said. "We are grateful for the sense of community needs the Burlington Industries Foundation has recognized in making this substantial gift."

Cytotechnology Gift Received

Hoffmann-La Roche, a major research-oriented health care company, has given $3,500 to Elon College, which will go directly toward the Cytotechnology Program.

The Cytotechnology Program at Elon offers both bachelor and associate degrees in cooperation with Roche Biomedical Laboratories, Inc. of Burlington, a subsidiary of Hoffmann-La Roche. The program is designed to meet the needs of students preparing for positions as cytotechnologists in hospitals, clinics, commercial laboratories, and private physicians' laboratories. The work of seniors in the program is done primarily at Roche Biomedical Laboratories in Burlington.

"On behalf of all of us associated with Elon College, I would like to thank Hoffmann-La Roche for their generous gift," said Dr. Jo Watts Williams, vice president for development at Elon.

CONFIDENCE OF THE PEOPLE

The Jewel in His Crown

From mayor of Winton, N.C. to Secretary of State, Thad Eure, chairman of Elon Board of Trustees, has been in elective office for 62 years - a U.S. record

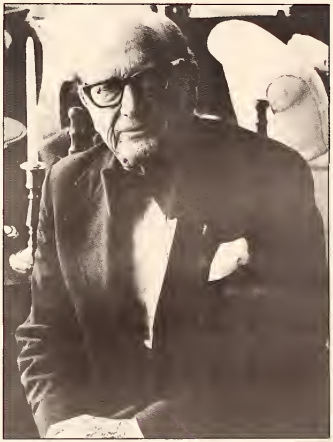
By Mary Ellen Priestley



Thad Eure has been chairman of the Elon College Board of Trustees since 1955.

The young boy walked with his father through the corridors of the state capitol in Raleigh. If memory is correct, the year was about 1913, and the pair had come by train from Gates County to see the sights, the first glimpse of the city for the boy. The highlight of the tour was the capitol, for the father admired and respected the elected government officials. He was showing his eldest child where these great men worked for the people of North Carolina.

In those days state officials, from the governor down, received their constituents, heard their problems or suggestions, and talked with them. As the boy and his father walked along the halls of the capitol, the boy saw "Governor" on one door, "Lt. Governor" on the next, "Secretary of State" on another, but all the doors were closed. He longed to see inside, to see these respected persons, but his father had no reason to knock on the doors, and they walked on. This experience impressed the boy. Why were the doors shut? What went on behind them?

At the end of the day, a foot-weary Tazewell Eure and his son Thad returned to the Gates County farm in eastern North Carolina, not far from the Virginia line. Tazewell Eure, an only child, had inherited the farm from his father, ownership by the family going back to an original land grant.

Thad had gone to a one-room, one-teacher school, trudging through all kinds of weather for the six-month school terms. He carried a tin lunch bucket holding a piece of side-meat, a sweet potato and a cold biscuit. During his six month vacations, he worked on his father's farm. For high school, he walked three miles to and from Gatesville, the county seat, for four years, 1913-1917. Here he studied, played football and thought about what he was going to do.

"I never thought of anything but practicing law," Thad Eure says. "So my father said I should go to the University in Chapel Hill where there was a law school. I'm satisfied that if Elon College had had one law book, he would have sent me there, for Elon College was a part of our family's life always. My grandfathers on both sides were devoted to Elon. An aunt of mine went there, and later my sister and two brothers, and four of my grandchildren."

Thad Eure attended the University of North Carolina two years for general studies and pre-law and two years for law. He traveled back and forth from home to university by train. One day as he returned to Chapel Hill, he met pretty Minta Banks, on her way back to St. Mary's College in Raleigh.

"For 48 years...no person has seen my door closed during office hours."

"Elon College was a part of our family's life always."

"No, I didn't visit her at St. Mary's," he recalls with a chuckle. "A man couldn't get inside the door at a girl's school in those days, but we did write letters. And I saw her in Winton, her home in Hertford County about nine miles from our farm."

After graduation from law school, Eure remembers he did not wish to go too far from his father's garden and smokehouse, for these were hard times in the early 1920's. He happened to find space for a desk at a law office in Winton, however, and set out by mule cart for Winton with a desk, some books and clothing. When he reached the bank of the Chowan River, he had to pull the raft-type ferry across the river. Then he made his way to the office.

"For the little things I did in my practice that first year, I was most often paid in hams, meat, vegetables from gardens or fish from the river," Eure says. "You may find this hard to believe now, but for the first year my cash receipts totaled less than $100. But I stuck it out."

A friendly, tall young lawyer who liked to talk with the residents of his new hometown, Eure decided to enter the 1923 race for mayor of Winton. He won. He was also chosen Hertford County attorney and was given an office in the courthouse.

Eure was seeing Minta Banks, and he knew that he wanted to marry her. But he had vowed that he would not marry until he was 25 years of age. "Minta says I am stubborn," he adds, but did agree to the first possible day, November 15, 1924, his 25th birthday! They were married in Winton.

Eure served as mayor of Winton until 1928 and county attorney until 1931. In the meantime, in 1929 he was elected to the N.C. House of Representatives. He was named principal clerk of the house for sessions of 1931, 1933, 1935 and the extra session in 1936. Already active in the Democratic Party, he was chosen Presidential elector for the First District, North Carolina, in 1932.

In 1936 Eure threw his hat into the ring for the office of secretary of state. He won and has won in every election since, through November 1984, for four-year terms. And so he is into his 49th year as secretary of state and his 62nd year of continuous elective office. According to the Council of State Governments, Secretary Eure's record tops all national records for longevity in elective office.

What is this man's secret for successful re-election? There are no secrets, he says, but he adds that certain events and persons taught him valuable lessons.

"I'll remember always that first trip to the capitol with my father when I never saw an open door. It made an impression on me. So when I was elected secretary of state, I took the nameplate off my office door and attached it to the inside and left the door open. With the door open, a person entering can see whose office this is and can see into the office. For 48 years–now into the 49th–no person has seen my door closed during office hours.

"I have served with 13 consecutive governors of North Carolina. I recall one governor's visit to my office. He came in, walked to a chair and started to sit. Just before hitting the bottom of the chair, he stood and walked to the door, took the doorknob, and I said, 'I've been here several years and that door has stayed open. Please, let's not close it now. If we must talk behind closed doors, could we go to your office?' " The governor left the door open and came back to chat.

"Don't think others don't know about that open door," Eure continues. "This policy led to a related one. No secretary of mine ever asks, 'Who's calling?' when a telephone caller does not identify himself or herself. I will not permit that. You know the main purpose of asking is so you can decide whether you'll talk or not. I will talk to them. And no secretary brings me a calling card from a visitor. If a person wants to see me, and I am in my office, I see him regardless of his station in life. This policy has stood me in good stead through the years.

"A person who gave me valuable information was Governor Clyde R. Hoey. He was elected governor the same year I became secretary of state. This man looked the part of a statesman; he dressed the part, and he knew how to handle people and address the issues. In those days people came to see the governor and they saw him."

Eure recalls a revealing incident when a group of Gates County citizens thought they had an answer to a problem. They made appointment to see Governor Hoey. Before they visited the governor that day, they came by to see Eure and tell him why they had come to Raleigh. As they left for their appointment, Eure suggested they drop in before they left for home to let him know how the governor had taken their ideas.

"They did come by and all sat down," Eure says. "I asked them how things went. One person looked around at the rest, and then he said, 'Governor Hoey is one of the finest men we ever saw. He's a good man, too. You know, he has a lot of problems, and he's doing the best he can.' So they had not even mentioned why they had come. They all looked satisfied. They smiled, and they left.

"Now Governor Hoey knew what they were coming to see him about. He also knew he couldn't do anything. But he was a man who could play quarterback, call the plays, and run the ball. He understood people," Eure concluded.

Another policy that has helped maintain Eure's popular support, he believes, has been his attitude toward school children. When so many public officials do not want to be bothered with noisy, questioning, noisy children, Eure has always welcomed them. He invites them into his office, shakes their hands, asks about their visit to Raleigh and their hometowns. Then the last thing he says to them is "Remember me to your papas and mamas," and he says, "They've been doing that through the years."

Does the secretary spend much time campaigning for re-election? "Oh, yes," he says. "One friend said I start before sunrise the morning after election and never stop! I've never spent much money on getting elected though."

Today Eure presides over the Department of the Secretary of State with five divisions for its multitude of responsibilities. When he was elected in 1936, he headed a Department of State with seven members. In the first full year, 1937, for example, they issued charters to about 700 business corporations. In 1984, with 53 employees, the department issued more than 12,000 charters.

When he began as secretary, the department served as custodian of the state constitution and all the laws enacted. He was a member of the Council of State, he attested documents signed by the governor and the use of the great seal of the state, as well as issuing charters to businesses. The divisions of the department today are Publications, Corporations, Securities, Uniform Commercial Code and General Administration.

"It is interesting the way I found my deputy in the Uniform Commercial Code Division," says Eure. "I was at the Elon College graduation in 1970, sitting on the platform when a young man graduate attracted my attention. His name was Charles Moore. After the ceremony I tried to find him in the crowd but couldn't, and so I telephoned him and offered him a job. He accepted. That young man had no vacation after graduation. Today he is in charge of the UCC Division."

Eure likes best those parts of his work that bring him into contact with people. Administering the oath of office, as for highway patrolmen and members of the general assembly, give him opportunities to meet a wide range of North Carolina people. Recently, he swore in the new commander of the highway patrol, and at the ceremony he noted that he had administered the oath of office to this officer at every promotion in his career. The same was true of the second officer in command.

Added to Thad Eure's numerous activities has been his service as a member of the Elon College Board of Trustees for 43 years and its chairman for 30. He has served during the presidencies of L.E.Smith, Earl Danieley, and Fred Young. With extensive family ties to the college and his own long and devoted service, he thinks now of its future.

"One thing worrying to all independent college or university administrations is financing. The cuts in federal funds to students and institutions as well as the coming strain on state budgets makes financing more difficult. States are receiving added responsibilities under the Reagan administration and less funding to help carry out these responsibilities."

Eure thinks that Elon College is fortunate to have Fred Young as president of the North Carolina Association of Independent Colleges and Universities. "He enjoys a first position among the state's institutions of higher learning, and he has given a lot to the association. North Carolina owes much to its independent colleges, and the state couldn't make it without them, couldn't pay for all the buildings, equipment, services and faculties they represent in order to educate qualified people. That's what the state would be required by law to do if we didn't have these independent schools."

As an active Democrat, Thad Eure was keynote speaker at the 1950 Democratic state convention. He served as its permanent chairman for the 1962, 1978 and 1982 state conventions. He still votes in Winton whose district named him Presidential elector in 1932.

Is the Democratic Party in North Carolina in disarray? No, he says, although it did suffer the biggest blow in his lifetime last fall, losing races for the U.S. Senate, governor, and two Congressmen. "The Democratic Pitty has always bounced back, and it will again. The party will be renewed rapidly, and the results will be seen in the next election," Eure says with the assurance of an elder statesman.

Thad Eure has come to be known by two personal trademarks–his red bow tie and his green ink pen. "I can't remember ever wearing a four-in-one-tie," he says. "Well, maybe once. When I was at the Sir Walter Raleigh Hotel one day before the election, a man from Scotland County came up and said, 'Eure, my constituents won't vote for you if you wear that foul tie. Here, put this one on!' And he held a four-in-one tie around my neck while his friend took a picture of me.

"The trouble is that I can't find these bow ties in shops. My daughter Armecia (Mrs. Norman Black) has a friend who makes them and Armecia gives me a supply at Christmas."

Using green ink to sign his name on documents also began back when everyone used a fountain pen filled from a bottle of ink. One governor's secretary estimated then that, given a governor in four years executes about 50,000 official documents and all are attested by the secretary of state, Eure would have used more than five gallons of the green liquid just in signing his name!

Secretary Eure wears a hat while most of America goes hatless. He tops off his attire in the cold months with a felt hat. In the spring he dons a straw hat. "My father always wanted wearing his hard-straw sailor on April 5th, his birthday, as he went into the village of Eure or Eure's Station where my father's uncle had a store and the Atlantic Coast freight trains went through."

Last summer Thad and Minta Eure moved from their Raleigh home of 39 years to a pleasant one-story house with solarium and deck facing the woods. "We hated to give up our home, but Mrs. Eure has arthritis, Eure says, "and we needed to have a one-story house. Here on this quiet road we are close to Thad Jr.'s home."

Thad Eure has been given numerous awards, citations, and accolades for his distinguished public service, but he takes greatest pride in the confidence people have shown him through re-elections for 62 years. This is the jewel in his crown.

BOUND TO BE THE BEST

Everybody's talking about educational excellence, but principal Wilma Parrish, Elon '57, is doing something about it. In a recent study, her middle school was named one of the top four in the nation.

By Mary Owens Fitzgerald

Amid squeals of delight the master of ceremonies at Western Middle School fervently announces, "Our next contestant is that lovely songbird, our very own principal, Mrs. Wilma Brown Parrish, bringing you "The Flivver Song."

Will you love me when my spark plugs they have rusted
And my inner tubes have lost their self-respect
When my radiator is leaking and my fenders are squeaking
Will you love me when my flivver is a wreck?"

intones Wilma Parrish to the audience's delight.

Bedecked in her bright flapper costume, comfortable and at ease as a leading contestant on the Faculty Gong Show, Mrs. Parrish is an enthusiastic educator who knows that learning can and should be fun. Laughter, rewards, individual attention and mutual respect are a few of the components that make learning at Western Middle School in Alamance County, North Carolina, vital and nationally recognized. The creative force shaping this school into an extraordinary environment for learning is Wilma Brown Parrish, Elon '57.

The selection of Western Middle School in 1980 as one of the four outstanding schools in the nation for Joan Lipsitz's study, Successful Schools for Young Adolescents, is perhaps the most significant recognition of Mrs. Parrish's achievements. Mrs. Lipsitz, director of the Center for Early Adolescence at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill examines four effective and successful middle schools that foster healthy social development and academic achievement. Western Middle appears in Lipsitz's study as "Proud Country."

Born in 1922 to Olivia and Billy Brown, Wilma Brown finished Burlington High School in 1941 and married William E. Parrish in 1942. Shortly thereafter, the young couple bought a small home and invited her mother to live with them. A son, Lewis, and a daughter, Betty, were born and the years passed for Mrs. Parrish in the role of the traditional homemaker.

Fourteen years after finishing high school, Mrs. Parrish was asked to substitute for Betty's first grade teacher at Elon Elementary School. She delighted the children with a Christmas tea, stories and songs woven into their academic work. The principal, Dr. Hill, was so impressed with this natural born teacher he offered a job without hesitation, only to discover that her formal education ended with high school.

Determined to see her in the classroom, Dr. Hill pressured Mrs. Parrish to keep an appointment with the registrar at Elon College. She left the office slightly dazed, for she found herself enrolled to begin classes immediately.

Mrs. Parrish's determination took her scuttling through classes at Elon, and she completed the course work in three years. "Elon was good to me," she reminisces. She played the piano and worked in the student store to help with expenses. Her husband worked a second job. She majored in English and gravitated toward drama, art and music courses that complemented her natural talents and interests. Though a wife and mother, she was active on campus as a day student, served her sorority as president (wears her sorority pin in her lapel to this day) and participated in Drama Club activities.

At graduation, Mrs. Parrish lacked only two drama courses for a double major. She plays the piano for pleasure and entertainment and readily admits, "I'm a ham." Coupled with her gift to make each student realize how special he is, the talents inherited from her mother provided the raw materials necessary for a superb teacher.

After eleven years as a teacher at Elon Elementary School, Mrs. Parrish was offered principalship at South Mebane Elementary School. Two and a half years later, she became principal at Altamahaw-Ossipee Elementary School. One of the most remarkable incidents in the Parrish's life occurred during this period. Grandparents themselves, they "adopted" a son.

Jimmy first appeared in Mrs. Parrish's life at Altamahaw-Ossipee the day Social Services enrolled a curly-headed little fellow shrinking down into the scruffy fur collar on his worn grey coat. Fear and anxiety filled his clear blue eyes. Mrs. Parrish's gentle but firm hug dispelled his fears. Warmed and relaxed, Jimmy eased into her heart and life. The bond between them grew.

However, in November 1972, Social Services planned to place Jimmy in a home out-of-state. Aware that he had been in eight foster homes in his brief nine years, Mrs. Parrish and her husband went to court, challenged Social Services and on April 27, 1973, won the custody battle for Jimmy.

In 1978 Elon Elementary and Altamahaw-Ossipee merged into Western Middle School and Mrs. Parrish was appointed principal. She participated in the original planning, worked with architects, the School Board and educational committees to achieve a setting that would stimulate and invite learning. Today, six years later, the building is spotless, with only gentle signs of wear.

Wilma Parrish began college 15 years after high school. She has since become one of the most successful principals in the nation.

Nestled among the landscaped beds of azaleas and hollies is the plaque denoting Western Middle as the recipient of the Alamance Beautification Special Schools Pride Award. How are such extras funded? "Money is not a problem," comments Mrs. Parrish. Her willingness to solve a problem with her own energy and elbow grease as well as personal funds is inspirational to those around her. The entire community has been infused with a spirit of pride for Western Middle School. As one colleague noted, "Mrs. Parrish takes her resources and makes gold when others only make tin."

Though Mrs. Parrish is completely in charge of her school, each of her teachers knows she is approachable, that they have freedom to function in the style best suited to them.

The curriculum is interdisciplinary and built around varied themes. Staff development is a priority. Developmental activities are a priority. Field trips include fascinating workbooks that incorporate fun into the academic requirements. Above all, basics are a priority: "Don't interrupt the basics!" Two block periods provide uninterrupted time for academic basics daily.

Undergirding all Mrs. Parrish's natural talent is a sound philosophy of education developed during her years at Elon and the University of North Carolina at Greensboro where she earned her Master's Degree in education in 1963. Deeply etched into her philosophy are these key words:Goals, organization and flexibility.

How does one account for Western Middle's success? Lipsitz quotes Mrs. Parrish as saying, "Anyone can do what we did with a united faculty, complete readiness on day one, and constant questioning: "How can we be the best? How can we make it inviting?"

Since the publication of Successful Schools for Young Adolescents, requests to speak have come steadily into Mrs. Parrish's office. Though she enthusiastically shares her concepts about adolescent education, she misses the time with her students and faculty. That is where her heart is, and that is what she loves; the interaction with her students. She knows them all by name. She loves them each for who they are. She taught James Turner at Elon Elementary. His son Rick is now at Western Middle. James says Mrs. Parrish is the "finest woman I've ever known. She likes her kids and takes time with them." Rick echoes his dad's remarks with "she's always your friend."

The greatest reward for Mrs. Parrish is the confidence and trust of her students. "Seeing the children build a good self-image and succeed" is her way of knowing that she has done her job, and done it well.

Mrs. Parrish cites lack of time as the most serious problem. "There just isn't time to do everything," she mused. "Maybe in retirement there will be time...time to do some writing, to edit my late mother's poetry."

For someone as vital and vigorous as Wilma Brown Parrish, retirement seems remote. It is inconceivable that her sparks plugs would ever rust if her windshield wipers shed bitter tears. But from those whose lives she has touched, there is a resounding "YES" when she asks, "Will you still love me when my flivver is a wreck?"

John Sparks
a man who knows movies

By Jim Schlosser

If you like movies, you'll love John Sparks.

His name doesn't appear on a movie marquee, only on a small directory in the lobby of the Green Valley Office Building.

He's a certified public accountant, age 60, a grandfather. In one corner of his office is a bookcase filled with such tomes as "Federal Taxes Affecting Real Estate," "Federal Income Gift and Estate Taxation" and "Tax Planning for Executive Compensation."

Sparks walks over to the bookcase, fishes around and pulls out "Dictionary of Film."

He was having trouble remembering 1969's movie of the year. He thought it was "The Graduate," but, no, the Dustin Hoffman classic was released in 1967 and was passed over for the top award that year by Rod Steiger's "In the Heat of the Night."

Ah, "Midnight Cowboy" - that's what won in 1969.

Such slipups are rare for Sparks. Name any movie and he ticks off the year it was made, who starred, how many, if any, Academy Awards it won, and lots of other facts, figures and fascinating details.

Who is the only actor to win two Academy Awards back-to-back? Stumped? Stumped? Sparks isn't.

Not only does Sparks know his movies, but he can even tell the theaters he munched popcorn in while watching them.

Some examples:

"Mutiny on the Bounty" — "I caught that one at the Paramount in Burlington in 1935. It was voted the best movie in 1935. Three actors - Clark Gable, Charles Laughton and Franchot Tone - all were nominated for the Academy Award. Victor McLaglen got it instead for "The Informer."

"Gone With The Wind" — "It opened in Greensboro on Feb. 12, 1940, at the National Theatre. I remember that because my brother and I got confused and came over from Burlington a week early to see the movie. So we went back to Burlington and saw a film there."

Which one?

"It was 'Arizona' with William Holden and Jean Arthur. We saw it at the State Theatre. I liked it, my brother didn't. I finally saw 'Gone With The Wind' later, at the State."

"Manhattan Melodrama" — "I saw that in 1935 at the National in Greensboro. That was the movie John Dillinger had just left in Chicago when he was shot by the FBI. The movie starred Clark Gable, Myrna Loy and William Powell."

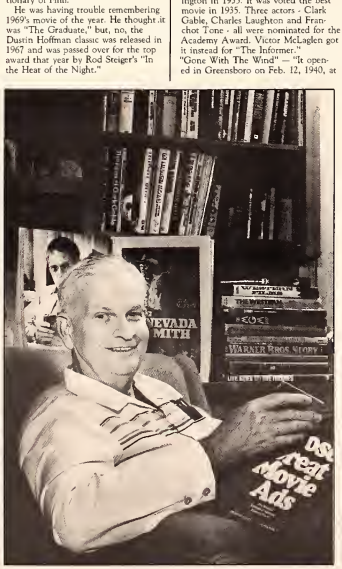
Sparks' favorite year for movies was 1939.

"I can sit right here and name 10 classics made that year," he says.

He winds up naming 12: "Destry Rides Again," "Gone With The Wind," "Gunga Din," "Stanley & Livingstone," "Jesse James," "Goodbye, Mr. Chips," "Union Pacific," "The Hound of the Baskervilles," "The Oklahoma Kid," ("one of the few westerns that James Cagney ever made"), "Dodge City," "The Wizard of Oz" and "Wuthering Heights."

By 1939, the talkies had been perfected. The big movie studios were in keen competition to make blockbusters. "And it's possible that 1939 was the last year that didn't feel the influence of World War II," Sparks says.

"World War II changed everything. That's why I think 'Gone With The Wind' was so popular. It depicted an era that was gone forever. And its appearance coincided with an era that was gone forever."



John Sparks '50 not only remembers movies, he remembers where he saw them

Before World War II, Sparks lived an idyllic life in Burlington, watching every shoot-'em-up western that played at the city's four movie houses: the Paramount, Alamance, State and Carolina, plus the Graham, where he remembers seeing "Trail of the Lonesome Pine" in 1936.

"I would get the dime from somewhere," he says of the admission price. "When the newspaper came I remember I always turned to the movie section first."

Psychologists surely would diagnose Sparks as having a deep-seated desire to be a glamorous movie star. Not so. He says he just loves the movies. He doesn't think he's really any different from most Americans.

"This country is very movie-minded," he says. "What we wear is influenced by the movies. Our president is a former movie star. For a long time, actors have been in politics: Jane Fonda and Paul Newman. A long time ago, an actor named Edward Arnold was close to Eleanor Roosevelt."

Sparks has deep affection for old movies, but he doesn't turn his nose up at what's on the screen today.

"I think the movies now are just as good as any ever made," he says. He was enchanted with Barbra Streisand in "The Way We Were." He thinks "Ghandi" will become a classic. He thought Robert Redford's "The Natural" was outstanding. He loved "The World According to Garp." He liked the fast pace of "Raiders of the Lost Ark."

While he thinks older movies are charming because they leave something to the imagination regarding sex, he's not always offended by today's nudity or graphic language. "If it's handled right, it doesn't detract from the movie," he says.

He was, however, startled by the profanity in "On Golden Pond," although he liked the film. "I just wasn't used to Henry Fonda using that kind of language."

He prefers to remember Fonda in "My Darling Clementine," which Sparks rates as the top western ever. He says the best detective movie ever made was "The Maltese Falcon"; the best musicals, "My Fair Lady" and "Cabaret"; the best movies with social impact, "The Grapes of Wrath" and "From Here to Eternity"; and the best adventure movie, "The Bridge on the River Kwai."

"Gone With the Wind" is the best overall film, he says.

At his home Sparks has a library containing 80 movie books. He has 50 films on cassette. He does most of the movie watching these days in front of the television. "I really don't go to the movies much anymore, maybe twice a year," he says.

He doesn't play "Trivial Pursuit," but he'd be unbeatable if he did.

Incidentally, the only actor to win back-to-back Academy Awards was Spencer Tracy for "Captains Courageous" in 1937 and "Boys Town" in 1938.

"I didn't see 'Courageous' until years later — on television," he says. "I saw 'Boys Town' the year it came out - in Mobane at "The Mebane."

Morrison to Leave Elon

Danny Morrison, assistant basketball coach, tennis coach and assistant athletic director at Elon, will become athletic director at Wofford College, Spartanburg, S.C., at the end of the 1985 basketball season.

Morrison, 31, is a 1975 honors graduate of Wofford and was a star guard on the Terriers' basketball team. He will take over the athletic director's duties from Billy Parker, who resigned last Dec. 20 as AD and head football coach.

Morrison, who attended Walter Williams High School in Burlington, began his coaching career at Williams after graduating from Wofford. He joined the Elon staff in 1979 as tennis coach and assistant to head basketball coach Bill Morningstar. Three years ago Morrison began working as an assistant to athletic director Alan White.

Saying that he regretted leaving Elon, Morrison stated, "I look at my new job at Wofford as a challenge and an opportunity. As athletic director at Wofford, I look forward to a continuance of good relations with Elon College."

"I think Wofford made an excellent choice in picking Danny to help restructure their athletic program," said Elon AD White.

"Danny has done an outstanding job for us as an assistant basketball coach and recruiter. He was just as efficient with the tennis team, which he has turned into a winner. We hate to lose a man of his caliber, but we wish him well."

"Danny is one of the finest people I've been associated with, not only as a co-worker but as a friend," Morningstar said. "He's been very loyal to our basketball program at Elon, very dedicated in every respect. He's not a person you can really replace because of his many fine qualities."

Kelly Retires After 17 Years

An era in Elon College athletics ended on December 31, 1984 when Coach Don Kelly retired after 17 years.

Kelly was the last of former Coach "Red" Wilson's assistants to leave the college. Wilson and his staff are credited with first bringing national recognition to the Elon football program.

Kelly came to Elon in 1967 from Fayetteville (N.C.) High School as chairman of the physical education department and assistant football coach. He had previously coached at Winston-Salem Reynolds High School where his team earned two state titles.

Kelly began his Elon coaching career tutoring defensive and offensive end linebackers. As the coaching staff grew he became more specialized and dropped offensive ends. Since Wright Anderson's tenure he has coached inside linebackers only.

Kelly always maintained a heavy teaching load. One of his proudest accomplishments is the establishment of the aquatics program.

Under Kelly's guidance the program expanded greatly and now includes, among other courses, Water Safety Instruction and Scuba. Kelly has logged more than 2000 hours teaching these Red Cross programs. He has also been the coordinator of the skiing program.

Coach Don Kelly

Kelly will carry some great memories with him. "There have been so many," he says. "The playoff game with Hillsdale, Michigan at the stadium here was something. We won easily, the game was played in a cold downpour. I remember we spent lots of time on the sidelines cleaning mud out of the players' noses and ears."

Elon faculty and students will have their share of Kelly memories too. Seniors from the football team will recall hot days during summer ball when Kelly would appear with a swim cap full of ice on his head, socks rolled down and shirt sleeves and shorts rolled up!

"Next to the word individual in the dictionary it says Don Kelly," athletic trainer Marty Baker often jokes.

After his retirement, Kelly plans to continue teaching part-time in Winston-Salem where his home is. He is also interested in developing his skill playing the organ and in travel.

"Lots of people will never know how much Don Kelly has meant to the Elon football program," said head coach Macky Carden. "And more than that he is one of the nicest persons you'll find anywhere."

"It will be difficult to find a person with the variety of abilities and the dedication of Coach Kelly," added Dr. Janie Brown, head of the Department of Physical Education.

Men's Basketball

As of this writing the Elon men's basketball team stood at 17-6 overall and was leading the NAIA District 26 competition with four games remaining. Pembroke State University was a close second in the district competition, however, and the finish promised to be exciting.

The front line of Robert Leak, Eric Hairston, and Rafael Hernandez and the backcourt of Vince Richardson and Ricky Larry have led the way for the Christians this season.

Women's Basketball

The Elon Golden Girls have continued to have a few problems this year. Through Feb. 11, the team stood 5-15 overall and 3-12 in the district. They last won on January 21 when they defeated High Point in Alumni Gym by a 66-61 count.

Jamie McNeely leads the Elon scoring. The 5-11 junior forward from Icard, N.C., has blazed the nets for an 18.7 scoring average.

Wrestling

Elon College recently finished in second place in the Washington & Lee Wrestling Invitational in Lexington, Va. The Christians were spearheaded by the top performance of Bobby Brown in the 150 weight class.

Elon finished with 78 points, second to the host Generals 109½. In third was Hampden-Sydney with 48½, followed by Davidson 35, Pfeiffer 30, Washington & Lee "B" team 23¾, and Lynchburg 8¼.

Other top performances were turned in by Mike Fitzgerald at 118 where he took second place. Also taking second place was Scott Crater at 142, and Fred McMannus in the heavyweight division.

A week earlier, Elon hosted its own Southern Invitational in East Gym. The Christians finished third behind Pembroke State and Livingstone. FSU and Livingstone are ranked in the nation's top 20 for NCAA Division II. Top performances were turned in by Brown in the 142 class where he took first place. McMannus took second in the heavyweight division.

To start the year, Elon visited the prestigious Clemson Tiger 8 Invitational at Clemson, S.C. Elon finished in sixth place of the six teams but gained valuable knowledge because of the stiff competition.

Would you like to give more to Elon, but you are not sure you can spare the money?

There are some things you can do without causing a future risk for yourself.

☐ Set up joint accounts giving Elon College the right of survivorship when you establish savings accounts, money market accounts, certificates of deposits and IRA's.

- Reserve the income yourself,
- Designate the income for someone else, or
- Give all or part of the income to Elon as you can afford it

☐ Set up a revocable living trust.

- Money, securities, or other property is placed with a trustee for the benefit of Elon College.
- The trustee invests the trust assets and you (or a recipient of your choice) get the income from the trust.
- You can terminate or change the trust anytime you want or need to, but, if you never revoke it, the entire trust principal (or whatever portion you have designated) becomes a gift from you to Elon College when you die.

Advantages of a Revocable Living Trust

1. It is prudent - that is, you continue to control it through the right to change or revoke it in case of illness or other emergency.
2. You can make the gift to Elon when your interest is high, knowing you have not lost the ability to take care of yourself.
3. The revocable living trust is easy to establish: some banks and most savings and loans associations can handle the whole transaction for you.

Recent Alumni Activities

Virginia Beach and Suffolk Chapters
On Friday evening, January 11, over 175 Tidewater Virginia alumni and other friends of Elon College, the largest turnout for a local chapter event, enjoyed a party at the Cavalier Golf and Yacht Club in Virginia Beach. Music was provided by The Emanons. Members of the college staff attending included Dr. Fred Young, president, and his wife Phyllis; J. King White '80, director of alumni and parent programs; and Barry Bradberry '75, associate dean of admissions and financial planning. Bob '52 and Faye '52 Smithwick hosted the social, which was organized by Suffolk Alumni Chapter President Betty Jean Crigger '76 and Virginia Beach Alumni Chapter President Henry Pittman '72.

Greater Richmond Chapter
Following a delicious dinner served at The Downtown Club, about 80 members of the Richmond chapter were entertained by The Emanons while admiring the view of the capital city high atop the Ross Building. Attending from the college with President and Mrs. Young, King White and Barry Bradberry were Vice President for Development Dr. Jo Watts Williams '55, PRIDE II Campaign Coordinator Dr. Jerry Tolley, and Assistant Director of Admissions Scott Stevenson '82. Joe and Nancy Redd Penick '80, who hosted the gathering, were assisted by several local alumni, including Chapter President Linda Shields '67 and her husband, Bill.

Greater Atlanta Chapter
On January 20, the Greater Atlanta Alumni Chapter sponsored their second annual gathering at the Foxfire Food and Spirits Lounge in northeast Atlanta to coincide with Super Bowl XIX. A snowstorm earlier in the day, coupled with subzero temperatures and a wind-chill factor of minus 45 degrees at kickoff time kept many Atlantans away; nevertheless, an enthusiastic group of primarily 49ers fans watched on a big screen TV as San Francisco defeated the Miami Dolphins. Director of Alumni and Parent Programs J. King White '80 represented the college. Chapter President Allen Bush '68 and a local committee of alumni promoted the event.

Elon Alumni Ski Weekend
The first "Elon Alumni Ski Weekend" at WinterPlace Ski Area in West Virginia was hailed as an outstanding success by over 40 alumni and friends who participated during the weekend of February 9-10. The event involved alumni from as far away as Raleigh, Charlotte, the District of Columbia, and Ohio. Director of Alumni and Parent programs J. King White led the group with assistance from Jack Loccioro '81 and Tim Moore '78, who serve on the Alumni Association's Executive Committee

Alamance County Chapter
To celebrate their return from another successful tour of the East Coast, the Emanons performed their annual "Welcome Back Concert" in Whatley Auditorium on the Elon campus for the Alamance County Alumni Chapter on Valentine's Day, February 14. The band performed an hour long show to a packed house. A reception followed in West Dorm Parlor. Tom Bass '71 is president of the chapter.

Guilford and Forsyth County Chapters
For the second time in as many years, a highly successful chapter function was held at the Greensboro Country Club in Greensboro, N.C. The Guilford and Forsyth County chapters, presided over by Ashburn Kirby '57 and Jack Loccioro '81, respectively, cosponsored this event featuring music by The Emanons. Several members of the Executive Committee of the Elon College Alumni Association, who met in Greensboro on the following day, were among those present.

Triangle Area Chapter
The newly organized chapter serving Raleigh-Durham-Chapel Hill and the surrounding communities cordially invites local alumni and friends to enjoy an elegant evening at the exclusive Capital City Club, located high atop the Center Plaza Building on the Fayetteville Street Mall in Raleigh on Saturday evening, March 16. The Emanons will provide dance music as guests enjoy the skyline while sampling a delicious assortment of heavy hors d'oeuvres and socializing with local Elonites. Local dignitaries are expected to join in the fun at this gala event. For more details contact Chapter President Tim Moore '78 at 919/469-9376.

Alumni Football Game
Plans are in the works for a football game between Elon's varsity football team and the football alumni at Burlington Memorial Stadium on Saturday, March 16. Alumni who want to suit up should contact Jeff MacKenzie '78 (Home: 919/449-6031; Work: 919/227-2979) or John Muir '76 (Home: 919/282-4599; Work: 704/782-4135) as soon as possible.

Greater Charlotte Chapter
The Myers Park Country Club in Charlotte will again be the site of a dance on Saturday, March 23 featuring The Emanons. Sandy and Fred '67 Bright will host the social. Chapter President Stan Butler '78, assisted by Jeanne '45 and Ace '48 Harrell and a local committee of fellow alumni, are making the arrangements. Call Stan at 704/523-0078 for more details.

Fayetteville Chapter
Cooper Mattocks '79 and a group of local alumni are making plans to organize a new alumni chapter to serve the Fayetteville (N.C.) area. Those who are interested in becoming involved should contact him by calling 919/822-2888.

Alumni Day
May 4 is Alumni Day on the Elon College campus. Reunions of the classes of 1935, the Golden Alumni Club and a "cluster" reunion of the classes of 1959-60-61 are planned. The highlight of the weekend will be a presentation of the Alumni Association's 1985 Awards during a special luncheon. All alumni will receive details by mail prior to the weekend.

A Great Comeback

In 1967, during his senior year at Elon, Randy Warren and several friends attended what began as a normal college party. As they were "pranking around" on the host's porch, Warren misjudged the depth of an eight-inch step to the ground, lost his balance and went sprawling.

He knew immediately something was wrong, but it was 24 hours later before he discovered the worst: his neck was broken and he was paralyzed from the neck down.

A star athlete in high school and at Elon, Warren had dreamed of playing professionally in the Canadian Football League after graduation. The accident put an end to those dreams. But since that time he has worked toward other goals with the same determination that made him a success on the playing fields.

Warren spent two years in hospitals following his injury. During that time he surprised his Elon coach, George Tucker, with a portrait of Tucker—an amazing likeness—that he had drawn by holding a paint brush in his teeth.

Within 18 months, Warren had regained some use of his arms and hands. He returned to college and completed his degree in 1968. Today he says, "I can do just about anything except walk and climb a tree—and I could probably climb a tree if a hear got after me."

Having worked in a variety of positions, Warren is now a self-employed income-tax consultant in his home town of Selma, N.C. Since last year, his artistic talents have brought him a measure of local fame. Working with wood-burning crafts, he has produced a number of outdoor and natural scenes noted for their fine detail.

The Smithfield (N.C.) Herald recently featured Warren and his works.

The Zoo Crew

By Johnnie Allen Renick '78

One of the most precious memories of Elon for me is a group of girls on second floor of Staley Dorm. We called ourselves the "Zoo Crew" which was a name well chosen. We were devoted to each other and enjoyed ourselves totally. We did wild things like organizing "jock raids," touring the campus parties, and creating a slogan for telephone use (not printable).

Once in the middle of December, before our Christmas break, we dressed up for Halloween and ran frantically through the boys' dorms. I'll never forget the Halloween we charged freshmen IDs to view our eternally dead sleeper, Beth. During the night she slept with her eyes opened on her back with her hands clasped on her chest. We helped the effect with flowers stuffed in her hands.

Our group had tee-shirts made with our nick-names on the back. We even had our picture taken for the year book. This July we have planned for our ten year reunion. We met 10 years ago this fall. The love and friendship we had may never come again. With each year, we remember our times together.

FACULTY AND STAFF

Charles Gilbert Latham, retired faculty member of Elon College, died on November 4. He was a native of Tennessee and a member of First Presbyterian Church of Burlington.

Zebulon H. Lynch, 83, of 306 W. Lebanon Ave., Elon College, N.C., died Tuesday Feb. 5, at Skilled Nursing Division of Memorial Hospital of Alamance. Funeral was held Friday, Feb. 10, at Beverly Hills United Church of Christ. Mr. Lynch, father of alumnus Dr. Betty Bowman '44 of Burlington, will be remembered by Elon grads of the early 1940s as the first superintendent of an experiment in college farming instituted by then president Dr. L.E. Smith. Mr. Lynch oversaw the operations on three tracts of land totaling 240.11 acres. He cleared a profit on the project which was established in 1941 to furnish food for the college's dining halls. However, because of the scarcity of help during the war years, he left the project in 1943 to become a rural mail carrier. Faced with mounting costs, the farm was abandoned in 1954 but much of the land has been used to advantage by the college since that time.

A placement office that works

Elon's Career Planning and Placement offices prepare undergrads for life after college

by Carol Nix

Elon College now has a Placement Office—and a new set of goals for helping students and alumni finds jobs. Whereas before, the Elon career planing and placement services were combined, they are now separate offices. This will allow each office to concentrate on specific goals and plans in preparing Elon students for seeking employment. The Career Planning Office works with students early in their academic lives at Elon by helping them decide on a major and on general career plans. As they become more specific about educational and career goals, they can begin to take advantage of placement services.

Karen Thompson, Director of Placement, is planning to extend these services by expanding on-campus interviewing and by teaching students interviewing skills. "By the time a student comes to me, he should have a good idea of what he wants to do," she said. "I can give them the tools, but unless they sell themselves in an interview, they won't get the job."

Thompson stresses the importance of being prepared for an interview. "Employers have different techniques. They want to see how you react in different situations." She suggests that students schedule a meeting with her before making contacts with employers through the Placement Office so that she can get to know them and know their personal needs as well as the company's specifications for the job. "I want a company to look at me as if I were their personal recruiter," Thompson said. "I want their respect as well as Elon College's having their respect."

Thompson seeks to instill professionalism in every student she sends to an interview. "I mean business, and I don't let our students interview unless they mean business." On-campus interviews are a reflection of Elon College, and Thompson sees that each student is well-dressed and well-prepared. The Placement Office holds workshops to improve students' skills in interviewing and to make them aware of the importance of the impressions they make on employers.

Karen Thompson, Elon's new director of placement, is charged with helping Elon graduates find good jobs in their fields. She has a variety of plans underway.

Not only is it imperative that students look professional, but the Placement Office must also reflect an air of corporate style. Renovations such as the addition of an interview room are planned. This will make it possible for more than one student to interview at a time. Computer hardware will be added so that Elon students and alumni records can be kept on file. This will also make it possible for students to find job listings in their field and current job openings.

The Placement Office plans to make "constant contact" with employers as well as alumni who may be able to hire Elon students."Because Elon is small, we have to go to greater lengths to create an air of professionalism and offer things that other major universities do not," Thompson said. "We have to look like we mean business." Thompson added that they intend to have the Placement Office "look as professional as it would be at any company."

Dean of Academic Affairs, Dr. Gerald Francis, also explained the changes being made in the Placement Office. "We want to take the concept of a standard placement office at a university and the concept of a professional placement office in a business community and come up with an aggressive, professional placement office at Elon." Francis said that Elon does not want to forget about its students after they graduate. "We aggressively recruit students and we want to aggressively help students find positions."

The Placement Office also plans to utilize the efforts of parents, friends, and alumni who may own their own company or are affiliated with a company to help a student get a position. This may also give the office some contacts with these companies as well as with the people "who have a special place in their heart for Elon." Furthermore, these contacts hopefully will advertise the intentions and capabilities of Elon's Placement Office to those who share an interest in the future of Elon and the continued improvements in its programs in all areas. By exercising all possible entries into the professional community, Elon sets itself apart from other college placement programs. Thompson feels that these contacts, as well as those on-campus interviews, make the difference by preparing students for interview situations. "I think you not only have to be concerned with how many get jobs, but how to go about getting a job," she said. "It's very competitive."

Elon is a small college, but its new placement program is a unique one. Many schools still have combined career planning and placement services. Elon's concentration in the direction of job preparation and placement for students is part of its continued efforts to have a good percentage of its graduates employed. This primary goal has launched a quest for the combination of education and professionalism. "Employers will see that our students are well prepared, that they want the jobs, that they have a focus on what they want to do—and they are serious," Thompson said. "If we stay along those lines, we should be successful." Elon is prepared to "give students the tools" as they seek the trade.

Robb Speaks at 1985 Elon Commencement

Governor Charles S. Robb of Virginia delivered the commencement address at Elon College on May 19 when approximately 427 seniors received their diplomas.

Commencement exercises began at 10:30 a.m. in Alumni Memorial Gymnasium and were open to the public.

Governor Robb also received the honorary doctor of laws degree.

Robb, a lawyer, was elected lieutenant governor in 1977 and in 1981 was chosen governor, receiving more votes than any candidate for state office in Virginia's history.

Robb was born in Phoenix, Ariz. He was graduated from Mount Vernon High School in Fairfax, Va., in 1957. He attended Cornell University on a regional scholarship and the University of Wisconsin on an NROTC scholarship. He received his bachelor of business administration degree at Wisconsin in 1961 and his law degree from the University of Virginia in 1973. He holds honorary degrees from a number of colleges.

Governor Robb has been affiliated with the military since 1957. He was student commander of all ROTC units on campus as an undergraduate and began active duty with the U.S Marine Corps in 1961. He served as commander of an infantry company in combat in Vietnam, where he received 10 decorations. He remains a lieutenant colonel in the U.S. Marine Corps Reserve.

Gov. Charles S. Robb of Virginia

Governor Robb is married to Lynda Johnson Robb, daughter of former President Lyndon B. Johnson. They have three daughters.

Commencement weekend activities began Saturday with the college worship service at 4 p.m. in the Elon College Community Church. Dr. Winfred Bray, pastor of the First Christian Church of the United Church of Christ in Burlington delivered the sermon, His daughter, Darla, was one of the graduating seniors.

A reception for the candidates for graduation, their families and friends was scheduled for 5 p.m. on the second floor of McEwen Dining Hall. The Elon College Alumni Association and the college faculty served as hosts.

Following graduation exercises, graduates, their families, and guests were invited to greet the governor on Scott Plaza.

Thad Eure Recognized by Elon Board

Thad Eure, North Carolina's longtime secretary of state who also has been chairman of the Board of Trustees of Elon College for 30 years, was honored during the annual spring meeting of the Board when a chair of political science at the college was named for him.

Establishment of the Thad Eure Chair of Political Science, "to be occupied in perpetuity by an outstanding member of the college faculty," was announced by Royall Spence, Jr. of Greensboro, vice chairman of the board, at a luncheon in Eure's honor.

Eure was named a member of the Elon College Board of Trustees in 1942. He was made chairman in 1955. His ancestors were among the pioneer members of the Christian Church which founded Elon, and it was through the church, now the United Church of Christ, that Eure became interested in the college.

Dr. J. Earl Danieley, president of Elon College from 1957-1973 and now Thomas E. Powell Jr. professor of chemistry, delivered the key address of tribute at the luncheon.

Donor Endows Scholarship

A gift of $100,000 has been made to Elon College by a donor who wishes to remain anonymous.

The gift will be divided equally for use in constructing a fine arts center on the Elon campus and for establishing an endowment fund for students from Virginia.

The scholarship will be known as the Mills E. and Katherine E. Godwin Scholarship Fund, honoring the former Virginia governor and his wife. Godwin is the only person to have served two terms as governor of Virginia. He was a member of the Elon board of trustee for more than 25 years dating back to 1950 and now serves as trustee emeritus. In 1954 he was awarded an honorary doctoral degree from Elon.

Board Names New Trustees

Five new members were elected to the Elon College Board of Trustees at its spring meeting recently. In addition, a new youth trustee was named, a trustee emeritus was chosen and eight members whose terms were expiring were repolitated.

The new trustees are Noel Lee Allen of Raleigh, Barbara Day Bass of Richmond, Va., and William A. Hawks, James W. Maynard and David E. Pardue, Jr., all of Burlington.

The new youth trustee is Amy Leonore Burch, a senior at Elon from Woodstock, Va. She will serve for two years.

Rev. G. Powell of Fuquay-Varina, whose term expired this term was named trustee emeritus.

The eight appointed for four-year terms are Wallace L. Chandler of Richmond, Va., Rev. Joseph M. Copeland of Portsmouth, Va., Dr. John R. Kernodle of Burlington, Ernest A. Koury Sr., of Burlington, Dr. G. Melvin Palmer of Greensboro, Emily Harris Preyer of Greensboro, Ralph H. Scott of Burlington and C. Max Ward of Burlington.

Allen, an Elon graduate of 1968, has been a partner in the Raleigh law firm of Borringer, Allen and Pinnix since 1977. He has served on the North Carolina Milk Commission and the State Board of Ethics. He is a former member of the Board of Directors of the Southern Conference of the United Church of Christ.

Bass, a 1961 graduate of Elon, has been teaching for approximately 25 years and is now chairman of the math department at St. Catherine's School, a day-boarding school for girls in Richmond, Va. In 1984, she received a Presidential Award for Teaching in Mathematics, one of 104 awarded nationwide.

Hawks is chairman of the board, a director and executive vice president of Falcon Industries, Falcon Communications, Unichem, Inc., and Alamance Fibers in Burlington. He is a graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and is president of the Alamance Chapter of the University of North Carolina Educational Foundation. He also is president of Alamance Country Club and of Burlington Investment Association. He has been active in Elon's PRIDE II campaign.

Maynard is the son of Reid A. Maynard, a long-time trustee of Elon College until his death last year. The younger Maynard is president of Tower Mills Inc., and has served as a member of the Elon College Presidential Board of Advisers.

Pardue is president of The Dacourt Group, Inc., a real estate investment company. He is a graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and is a member of the Elon College Presidential Board of Advisers. He has played in the Elon College Community Orchestra for a number of years and has been active in the College's PRIDE II campaign.

Terms for Allen, Bass and Hawks will expire May 31, 1986; for Maynard, May 31, 1988; and for Pardue, May 31, 1989.

Will Elon Be Number One?

The 1985 Elon College Phonathon ended with a total of $141,258 pledged to the college, the largest amount in the six-year history of the Phonathon.

A special challenge was issued this year, pitting Elon against Davidson College and Wake Forest University. Last year Elon alumni ranked third behind these two schools in the percentage of alumni who make an annual donation to their alma mater, out of 55 private and public colleges and universities in the state.

According to Dr. Jerry Tolley, director of corporate and annual resources and Phonathon organizer, it is still too early to tell whether Elon has taken over the number one spot in alumni giving. "Results are not in from Davidson and Wake Forest yet," said Tolley, "but I feel Elon has a strong chance of becoming first in the state in alumni giving.

"This was a great year of achievement for Elon College," he said. "In order for us to meet our challenge, however, we need to collect monies on all of our 5,584 pledges.

"I am pleased with the dedication and support of Elon alumni," added Tolley. "Two years ago Elon ranked near the bottom in the state with only 15% of its alumni making an annual gift. For 1983-84, the percentage of participation was 30%, and this year looks even better."

The Phonathon, an annual winter event at Elon, raises money for the Annual Fund, which helps to pay for general operating expenses. By offsetting the rising costs of day-to-day operations, donations to the Annual Fund also help to keep tuition costs down.

The race in the Greek Phonathon alumni participation challenge is going to be close!! As of this writing, Kappa Sigma and Zeta Tau Alpha have marginal leads. All other Greek organizations are closing in on the front runners.

"As of May 1, 1985, the college has received 4,300 alumni gifts, as compared to 3,300 at the same time last year," said Tolley. "There is still one month left for us to collect outstanding gifts, as we will close our books on May 31," he added.

"I would like to thank every alumnus who has made a contribution to this very special and important fund," said Tolley. "Elon has one of the highest percentages in the state in alumni giving, and we want everybody to know about it."

Alumni

Three Awards Presented on Alumni Day

The Elon College Alumni Association presented special awards to a pair of alumni and recognized a major industry during the annual Alumni Awards Luncheon held on Alumni Day, May 4, 1985.

Dr. Don L. Allen, dean of the University of Texas Dental Branch at Houston, received the Distinguished Alumnus Award for 1985, and Deborah A. Yow, head basketball coach at the University of Florida, received the Young Alumnus of the Year Award.

Burlington Industries, which had its beginning in the nearby town of Burlington, received the Elon College Service Award, presented for the first time. The award recognizes one organization that has been instrumental in the advancement of the college through the giving of time and energy.

Burlington Industries, now headquartered in Greensboro, and the Burlington Industries Foundation have contributed generously to Elon since 1945, the years when the company founded by Spencer Love has had its greatest growth. It is now the world's largest textile manufacturer.

Altogether, Elon has benefited by more than $500,000 in gifts from Burlington. A number of Elon graduates are also employed by the firm.

The Distinguished Alumnus Award, presented to Dr. Allen, is awarded annually to a maximum of two alumni who have distinguished themselves in their professions and communities, bringing honor to their alma mater.

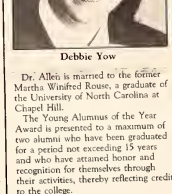
A native of Burlington and an alumnus of Elon with the class of 1956, Dr. Allen is a former associate dean for administrative affairs in the School of Dentistry at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Dr. Allen spent 10 years at Chapel Hill in the School of Dentistry after he obtained his D.D.S. degree there in 1959. He earned his M.S. degree in periodontics at the University of Michigan in 1964.

Dr. Allen joined the University of Florida College of Dentistry in 1970 and served as associate dean, interim dean and then dean in the Department of Periodontology. He also was a professor in the College of Dentistry.

He moved to the University of Texas at Houston, Dental Branch, in 1982 and since that time has served as dean and professor in the Department of Periodontics.

Dr. Allen currently is chairman of the Commission on Dental Accreditation and chairman of the Council on Dental Education for the American Dental Association. He also is chairman of the visiting scholars committee, International College of Dentists. He is a fellow of the American College of Dentists and the International College of Dentists. Dr. Allen has written extensively on technical subjects in the profession.

Dr. Don Allen



Debbie Yow

Dr. Allen is married to the former Martha Winifred Rouse, a graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

The Young Alumnus of the Year Award is presented to a maximum of two alumni who have been graduated for a period not exceeding 15 years and who have attained honor and recognition for themselves through their activities, thereby reflecting credit to the college.

Deborah Yow, this year's recipient, is a native of Gibsonville and an alumnus with the class of 1974. She has served as women's head basketball coach at the University of Florida. She is married to Dr. William Bowden, dean of special instructional programs at the university.

Ms. Yow captained the Elon women's team to the North Carolina State Championship in 1974. She became women's head coach at Williams High School in Burlington that fall, the inaugural year for the sport. The next year she taught and coached in the Guilford County school system, guiding her Eastern Guilford team to a 25-3 record and a third-place finish in an open state tournament.

She was named women's coach at the University of Kentucky in the fall of 1976 where she put the program on a sound footing before leaving to go to Oral Roberts University in 1981. Her 1982-83 team there posted a 26-1 record and went unbeaten during the regular season.

She moved to the University of Florida in 1983 and the 19-9 record of the 1983-84 team was the best in the school's history up to that point.

Recent Alumni Activities

Triangle Area Chapter Several months of planning resulted in the largest turnout of alumni ever to meet for a local Alumni Association event on Saturday evening, March 16, at the Capital City Club in Raleigh. More than 150 alumni from the Raleigh-Durham-Chapel Hill area celebrated the return of an active alumni chapter to the capital city by kicking up their heels to music performed by The Emanons at this gala occasion. Among the assortment of food sampled by the guests was a five layer cake decorated with the Elon College seal and "Fighting Christian." Sandy '72 and Noel Allen '69 hosted the gathering, and a committee of more than a dozen local alumni headed by Chapter President Tim Moore '78 and his wife, Linda '78, promoted the event. For more information regarding chapter activities, contact Tim and Linda Moore at 919/469-9376.

Greater Charlotte Chapter For the second year in a row the Myers Park Country Club was the site of a well-attended alumni chapter dance featuring The Emanons. Members of the college staff who socialized with the more than 100 Elon supporters included Jo Williams, King White and assistant director of admissions, Gretchen Kasting '84. The gathering was organized and promoted by Chapter President Stan Butler '78 and his wife, Martha '79, Jeanne '45 and Ace '48 Harrell, and a committee of local alumni. Fred '67 and Sandy Bright hosted the party. Plans are underway to sponsor an informal alumni gathering in late June. For information regarding chapter activities, contact Stan and Martha Butler at 704/523-0078.

Fayetteville Chapter The Green Valley Golf & Yacht Club in Fayetteville will be the site of the area's first alumni gathering in many years. A committee of local alumni headed up by Cooper Mattocks '79 has reserved the club for a party on Saturday, June 1. Invitations will be mailed to area alumni and friends of the college in May. Judging from the interest received so far, a large turnout is anticipated. For more details, call Cooper Mattocks at 919/822-2888.

Upcoming Chapter Events As in previous years, several alumni chapters, including those serving the Suffolk, Virginia Beach, Richmond, and Washington, D.C. areas are planning to sponsor gatherings over the summer. Alumni and friends should watch their mail for the details.

Sports

Parham Named Assistant AD

Tom Parham has been named assistant athletic director and tennis coach at Elon College, athletic director Dr. Alan White recently announced.

Parham will succeed Danny Morrison, who accepted a position with Wofford College as fulltime athletic director.

Besides his coaching and administrative work, Parham will also be a member of the Physical Education Department staff as a teacher. Parham, 44, comes from Atlantic Christian College, where he has been involved with athletic administration, teaching and coaching.

Tom Parham

Parham has been chosen the Carolinas Conference or NAIA District 26 Coach of the Year a record 19 times and was the first coach ever selected National Coach of the year twice, those honors coming in 1977 and 1979.

Parham's tennis teams at Atlantic Christian won two national championships in 1979 and again last year. Through the years, his teams have compiled 16 straight winning seasons as well.

Parham graduated from Atlantic Christian in 1963 with a B.S. in English and physical education and a minor in history. He received his M.Ed. from the University of North Carolina in 1964.

Hassard Named Academic All-American

Clay Hassard of Charlotte, N.C., a senior offensive tackle for the Fightin' Christian football team, was named to the NAIA Academic All-America team for 1984. Hassard has a cumulative 3.24 grade point average in business administration. He had previously been named to the All-South Atlantic Conference team for Elon.

Hassard is one of only four players chosen for the Academic All-America team. Twenty-five Elon athletes were named to the Dean's List for the fall semester at Elon College.

"We are very proud of Clay," said head coach Macky Carden. "It is just great when a player achieves excellence on the field and in the classroom. This is the kind of thing that makes you appreciate the student-athlete."

Fall Recruits Bolster Elon

Even head coach Macky Carden, a decidedly low-key individual, seems excited about the quality of recruits and transfers for Elon and Fighting Christian football next fall.

"We have a banner year," said Carden in releasing all Elon recruits to date, including transfers. "We've signed 35 kids so far, 26 of them freshmen, and we'll probably sign four or five more freshmen."

Heading the list of stellar recruits is transfer Perry Cuda, 6-1, 190 pound former Alabama quarterback. Cuda was recruited by the late Bear Bryant in his final year at Alabama, was redshirted in 1982, saw some action in 1983 when he led the Crimson Tide to three touchdowns in a victory over Vanderbilt.

After a back injury and some personal difficulties with the Alabama quarterback coach, Cuda transferred to South Carolina last year, but had academic problems and dropped out of school. In the meantime he had back surgery which was deemed successful.

Despite Cuda's acknowledged talent, Carden is adopting a wait-and-see attitude toward the starting quarterback position.

"We've got four good quarterbacks in Garrett Robinson, Mike Brodowicz, Craig Taylor, and Gary Minson," said Carden. "Cuda has some catching up to do, and he'll have to beat out our returnees to win a starting job."

Among the transfers are Donnie Donovant, a 6-8, 265-pound defensive tackle who was at Duke, and John Duffell, a 5-10, 175-pound runningback who was at UNC.

NAIA Area Results

The Elon baseball team lost to Northern Kentucky 3-2 in the championship game of the NAIA Area Tournament in Bluefield, W. Va., Sunday, May 12. The Christians had defeated Northern Kentucky 13-9 in an earlier game.

There is still a possibility that the Elon team will receive an at-large bid to the NAIA Nationals in Idaho, May 27-June 1.

Elon Nine Wins Conference District Titles

The Elon College baseball team wrapped up their first regular season under Coach Rick Jones with championships in Carolinas Conference and NAIA District 26 play.

Jones has also been named Coach of the Year in both the conference and the district.

The team finished 33-5 overall, 22-3 in District 26 and 15-3 in the conference. They entered the District Championship held at Greensboro's War Memorial Stadium on May 3-4 as the top seed, scheduled to play fourth-seeded Atlantic Christian College in the opener.

The winner of the District 26 tournament will advance to NAIA area finals in Bluefield, W. Va., May 17-18. The national championship tournament is scheduled for May 27-June 1 at Lewis Clark State College in Lewiston, Idaho. Should the team make it to that tournament, they would be the first from Elon to do so.

Four players received post-season conference and district honors. Maurice "Mo" Morton, Jeff Neufang, John Driscoll, and Greg Harris were named to the All-Conference team. Morton, Driscoll, and Harris were cited for All-District honors.

Tennis, Golf Wrap-up

Golf

The Elon golf team, coached by Bill Morningstar and led by senior Barry Filson, had a fine season, finishing in second place in both conference and district tournaments.

In the district tournament held at Campbell College April 14-16, the Christians were in second place going into the final round and after nine holes had captured the lead. Rain, however, forced the cancellation of the day's round, and scores were reverted to the previous day, leaving the team with a second place finish.

The season's record was still good enough to make an alternate's bid to the NAIA National Championship tournament a possibility for the Elon team. The Christians won the national title in 1982.

Men's Tennis

The Fighting Christian men's tennis team wrapped up their regular season with a fourth place finish in both district and conference tournaments.

Players Jeff Hooks and Duane Johnson advanced to the semi-finals in doubles in the District tournament and were named to the All-District team.

Coached by Steve Rickard, filling in for Danny Morrison, who resigned to accept a post at Wofford College, the team finished with a respectable 12-4-1 record for the season.

Women's Tennis

Coach Karen Carden's women's tennis team placed fourth in the Carolinas Conference tournament and tied for fifth in the District 26 playoff.

The doubles team of Cindy Wall and Missy Jones placed second in the third flight of District tournament doubles play.

The team's overall record for the season was 9-7. They were 4-3 in conference play and 6-5 in the district.

The war to end all wars

W.B. Terrell '25 recounts suffering and terror of World War I

By Craig Shaffer

"You're in the presence of antiquity," jokes W.B. "Bill" Terrell.

Those who fought in World War I are indeed living relics, and Terrell is one of the oldest veterans in Alamance County.

Though he'll be 89 years old this month, many exact dates and details about his Army days are still clear as fresh water. Few war memories are murky to the former principal, school superintendent, Elon College alumni director and soldier.

With coaxing, he puts on his rusty old green Army helmet. "Does it look silly?" he asks, mildly embarrassed. Then he sits for the young photographer with proud dignity, holding his olive green battle blouse in front of his chest. It's so old it is about to fall apart.

There's a box of memorabilia: aerial photographs of landscapes pockmarked by shelling; pictures of ships he sailed on; a huge canvas map showing troop movements in Belgium. Several "confidential" manuals. Two old rolled leggings.

Decades before the hearing aid and slight limp, long before his days in education, a 21-year-old Terrell was working in a west Burlington hosiery mill.

America called; the first world war had begun. "There wasn't much choice," Terrell recalls, eyes sparkling behind his glasses. "I was subject to the draft. Instead of waiting for it I took the realistic view. I felt I would be in one way or another."

He also remembers the "patriotic fervor was at a high level. We felt we had to go."

One easy date for the Cedar Grove native to remember is May 26, 1917, when he joined the 120th Infantry unit under Capt. Don E. Scott of Graham. Scott later became a general before leaving duty.

The Alamance County company headquarters was on the third floor of the Moser-McDonald Building, he remembers.

Though he didn't have any musical experience, Terrell was recruited to play the alto horn in the infantry band. "The bass horn goes BOOM and the alto goes poof," he chuckles. "I wasn't much of a musician."

Few of the band members could read sheet music. They practiced by parading up and down the streets of Graham. "Peoples ears are still hurtin'," Terrell laughs.

That September the 120th was sent to Camp Sevier in Greenville, S.C., to join the "Old Hickory" 30th Division for training. Terrell also spent time in Company M in Durham where he was selected for army intelligence as part of a team of observers.

Terrell was shipped out to England and by June 1918, he joined the 30th Divisional Headquarters in Calais, France. That July, he began observation work in Ypres, Belgium. By August he was promoted to corporal.

Terrell's job was to report enemy activity, including troop movements, planes or balloons during the day or signal lights at night. Observers set up posts in trenches or abandoned French chateaus.

The first night they were assigned to a British unit in Ypres for observation duty, they saw the British soldier in charge of the carrier pigeons get killed. Ypres was shelled heavily throughout the remainder of the war, he notes.

The 30th Division later took part in the most decisive operation of the war, the Sept. 29, 1918, assault on the Hindenburg Line. Until the Allies broke through, the Germans considered it impregnable.

Terrell's strongest memories of the war came from that day when troops, tanks, and artillery rallied to the assault.

He clearly recalls "the terrible slaughter that day," he said. "I saw many of my former buddies in Company M pretty well shot up."

"It was terrible seeing not only our wounded come back but the German prisoners who were also wounded," he continued. "When you reflect on it, it was the worst part of the war."

From that day on, the Allies advanced under withering fire from German machine-gunners covering their troops' retreat.

"They're supposed to stick with the machine guns until they died," he added. "Those gunners were something else."

The 30th Division soon saw continued action during the Battle of Montbrehain and the Battle of La Selle River.

Some days they trudged along with the battle units or rode bicycles, burdened with telescopes, maps and field glasses, and .45-caliber handguns.

"So far as I know, I never killed anyone," he says, with a hint of pride. "I hope I never did."

But he admits being afraid. "Oh yes," he says, nodding. "You always felt you were in a situation where anything could happen."

A doughboy remembers: W.B. Terrell with World War I.

During war, the enemy is usually perceived as inhuman. But Terrell discovered otherwise when he guarded some German prisoners.

"Most of them could speak English. They didn't want war anymore than we did," he remembers. "No country wanted it. Most of the people didn't want war. But there was no way to help it."

He paused peering out the window of his Elon College home.

"When it was over, we thought it would never happen again—that people would be too smart."

The worst experience he had was chemical warfare. He remembers mustard gas was "terrible...it eats your skin."

The war ended April 8, 1919, for Terrell when he was discharged at Camp Jackson, S.C. He returned to the hosiery mill and later entered Elon College, graduating in 1925 to become principal of a Gaston County high school.

By the time World War II again embroiled the globe in conflict, he was principal of Elon High School, where he met his second wife. By the end of the "Big One," he was superintendent of Wadesboro City Schools and later of Warren County Schools.

He then came to Elon College as director of alumni affairs and after retirement was appointed a magistrate, serving at the Burlington Police station for five years. He also served as a small claims court judge for three years until 1976.

Terrell is also a Mason, a Shriner, and a member of both the Woodmen of the World and the Scottish Rite Order.

Elon's Mother Superior

Emma Lewis, friend and confidante to a generation, plans to retire

By Moses Crutchfield

For more than a quarter of a century, Emma Lewis' door — and heart — has been open to confused or discouraged students seeking answers to their questions and solutions to their problems. During that time, a generation of Elon students discovered they could turn to her to find the loving, caring advice they sought.

In her quiet, low-key way, the slender lady, now graying and showing only slight effects from a bad fall several years ago, has given them the help — the big smile — they needed.

It might have been only a matter of straightening out a mixed-up schedule. It might have been simply checking on an income tax return. It could have been helping a student find a campus job, or it might have been locating scholarship funds for a distressed student in need of financial aid. Or it could have been just the act of putting someone on the shoulder and offering them a few well-chosen words of cheer.

Whatever — and there were times when the wisdom of a "Dear Abby" was required — Emma Lewis has loved every moment of those years she's spent at Elon looking after her "children." The frequency with which alumni, back on campus, come by to exchange greetings is proof enough that these "children" remember and are grateful for the help and advice she offered them years ago.

Remembered David Vaughn, a former student and friend: "She always was effective, pleasant and encouraging in her relationships with students. She always had the time to listen to a student's problems. And she knew how to get something done. If she couldn't do it herself, she knew where to go to get it done.

"A lot of students may not have known her by name, but they knew her by sight — her office was in Alamance Building at the time — and they felt free to call upon her.

"She was very much a people-oriented person. She thrived on contact with people. I would say she was a very effective ambassador for the college."

That spirit of interest and caring which leaves such an indelible impression upon young people still is there as Mrs. Lewis approaches retirement. If her target date holds up, she'll be closing her desk in the Office of Development on September 30, 1985 to join her husband, Charles Lewis, who is scheduled for retirement from Burlington Industries on the same day. There is a possibility that Mrs. Lewis may stick around another week to make it an even 27 years at Elon. She and her husband both have timed their retirements for the moment when annual reports and fiscal years are behind them. She has no definite plans for retirement. "The first six months," she said, "I'll spend cleaning out my house from the basement up. After that's done, then I'll be ready to think about something else."

In her years at Elon, Mrs. Lewis has watched thousands of students come and go. And time, she has observed, has brought notable changes in the make-up of Elon's student body, in its faculty and in the nature of the campus atmosphere. She was witness to the unrest of the Vietnam years, to the breaking of new ground with integration on campus and to the dramatic shift in attitudes that marks today's student. Elon weathered the many crises well, she said.

"During those early years of the 1960's, there were a lot of desperate boys on campus because of the Vietnam war," said Mrs. Lewis. There were also a lot of night school students, veterans on the GI bill. Then came the unrest of the late '60's and '70's.

"Elon was fortunate," Mrs. Lewis noted. "We had only a minimum of disturbance." That she credits, in large part, to the "firm hand" of Dr. J. Earl Danieley, Elon's president.

Since the uncertainty of those days, she's witnessed students make a "180-degree turn in their attitudes." She watched integration work to the point that a black was elected president of a student body that not too many years before was completely white.

She has seen requirements for both students and faculty strengthened, and she has seen changes in the nature of the college's mission and in its connections with the church.

Since 1979 Emma Lewis has been assigned to the Office of Development located in the Powell Administration Building. She has missed the direct contact with students that she once had because the Powell Building is off their beaten path.

"For years I was in The Alamance Building where students passed all the time. My door was never closed and students were dropping in all along. It isn't that way now because the Development Office is out of the area where students circulate," she said.

Along the way, Mrs. Lewis once was responsible for all the duplicating done by the college, including faculty and staff.

A classic Emma Lewis pose: listening to a student.

"I really was popular in those days," she said with a laugh, "because I had copies of all the exams."

Mrs. Lewis also served as secretary to the faculty in the days when she was doing the duplicating job.

For the last several years, she has carried the title of Records and Research secretary. Her job has been to research and establish records for the alumni association, for endowments, and for scholarships.

"There was a need for more complete scholarship and endowment records when I came in here," she said. "I went back and checked all the files. I read folders of all the college's presidents and I talked to people in an effort to get additional information," she said. Today, Elon has files for all those things.

Mrs. Lewis, a native of Dunn, N.C., and the youngest of five sisters, attended the University of North Carolina at Greensboro and took the secretarial course offered there. (It was known as Woman's College then.) She went to work for Burlington Mills in the Burlington transportation office in 1940, met her husband-to-be there and was married in January 1942. Six months later, her husband was called into service and she went to Wilmington to live with a sister and work in the personnel department of the North Carolina Shipbuilding Company. They returned to Burlington, January 1, 1946. Then, following the birth of children Jane and John, she went to work on a part-time basis for Dr. Robert Benson, then dean of students, in 1958.

That, of course, led to a full-time job.

Of all the people Mrs. Lewis has encountered at Elon, the fondest memories are of Dr. A.L. Hook — as they are for many others who have attended and worked at Elon.

"Pessor Hook certainly left him imprint upon Elon," she said. "He loved the school. Alumni always looked for him when they came back. His loss was a tremendous blow, both in the strength of his own personality and in the ties he represented for those generations which he knew in the span of the years he was here."

The college annual of 1970 was dedicated to Emma Lewis.

"In recognition and appreciation of an individual's service to Elon, the Phi Psi Cli editors have set aside this page. The award is made in tribute to one who has made an exceptional effort in promoting understanding, good will and knowledge...in furthering the goals of Elon College."

It was a fine tribute in 1970, and still is today. Emma Lewis will be missed when she retires.

Drusilla R. Clark writes the following letter about her mother, Blanche Teague Riddle, who died on Oct. 23, 1981: "I have her diploma (framed) hanging in our home. She was so proud of that diploma - and it carried her to great things - in far corners of the world. She moved to Florida about 20 years ago and had her own home until she became unable to manage it - at which time we built an apartment at our home and she came to live with us. She attended her 50th reunion and was so happy to attend.

"We think she was a great lady who dared to do the things most of us wouldn't dare to do! She had a certain 'Elon' which got her into impossible situations 'where angels fear to go' - and she always got home Scot free! (She was no fool!)

"She never forgive us when we made her quit driving her little VW when she was 79!"

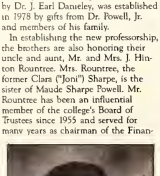
Second Powell Professorship Is Endowed

A new endowed professorship has been established at Elon College, and Dr. John Sullivan has been named to the position.

The Maude Sharpe Powell Professorship was endowed by gifts from Dr. Thomas E. Powell, III, John S. Powell, J.D., and Dr. James B. Powell in memory of their mother, the late Maude Sharpe Powell, a 1921 graduate of the college. It is the second Powell professorship at Elon. The Thomas E. Powell, Jr. Professorship, currently held by Dr. J. Earl Danieley, was established in 1978 by gifts from Dr. Powell, Jr. and members of his family.

In establishing the new professorship, the brothers are also honoring their uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. J. Hinton Rountree. Mrs. Rountree, the former Clara ("Joni") Sharpe, is the sister of Maude Sharpe Powell. Mr. Rountree has been an influential member of the college's Board of Trustees since 1955 and served for many years as chairman of the Financial Affairs Committee. Both were graduated from Elon, he in 1933 and she in 1931.



Dr. John Sullivan

"We are once again indebted to the Powell family for their generosity, vision and commitment," said Dr. Fred Young, president of Elon, in announcing the professorship. "In continuing the tradition of leadership, service and philanthropy begun by their father and mother, they ensure vitality and quality for this institution."

A native of Bellemont in Alamance County, Sophia Maude Sharpe was a noted chemistry scholar and athlete while a student at Elon. After her marriage to Dr. Powell, Jr., she was a resident of the Town of Elon College for more than 20 years before her untimely death in September, 1944. A leader in religious, civic and social activities, she particularly enjoyed her membership in the Women's Missionary Society of the Elon College Community Church and served as that group's president for a number of years.

Dr. John Sullivan, professor of philosophy at Elon since 1970, has been selected by the college as the first to hold the Maude Sharpe Powell chair.

"Dr. Sullivan's credentials are impeccable," said Dr. Young in announcing the appointment. "As a scholar, thinker, and leader, he is superb. However, the primary factor in his selection was his effectiveness as a teacher. Willingly assuming the role of mentor, counselor and friend to his students, he exemplifies the ideal for a liberal arts institution."

Dr. Sullivan is a graduate of Catholic University, from which he earned both the B.A. and M.A. degrees. He also holds a J.C.D. degree from Lateran University in Rome, Italy, and a Ph.D. from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. In 1976-77 he was Lilly Scholar in the Humanities at Duke University. In 1980 he was awarded the Daniels-Danieley Award for Excellence in Teaching at Elon.

A noted speaker and lecturer, Dr. Sullivan has given over 60 talks, workshops and other public presentations throughout North Carolina and in other states. He has also acted as consultant for the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH), the NC. Humanities Committee, the N.C. Nurses Association, the UNC-G Department of Education and the Traditional Acupuncture Institute of Columbia, Maryland.

He is the editor of The Storied World: A Medieval Reader, which was written as a part of the NEH Measure of Man project. He is also the author of two essays in Schools and Meanings: Essays on the Moral Nature of Schooling, edited by David Purpel and H. Svi Shapiro and published in 1984 by University Press of America.

Study Abroad Expands to Full Semester

By Meredith Lee '86

Beginning this fall, Elon College students will have the opportunity to live and study abroad for an entire semester. Through the Study Abroad Program, the fall semester 1985, beginning August 19 and ending December 16, will be spent in England.

"This is the 18th year of Elon's Winter Term Abroad Program," said Dr. Bill Rich, Coordinator of the Study Abroad Program. "We see the fall semester as expanding the opportunity for students to study abroad."

Elon is working in conjunction with the Guilford College Study Abroad Program to provide an educational experience for 19 Elon students and 38 Guilford students. The program is designed to tap the artistic, historical, political, cultural as well as educational resources in London. It is offered for the regular cost of tuition, room and board, plus airfare.

Upon arriving in London, the students will begin their cultural experience with a five-day orientation to the city. Classes will begin the following Monday, August 26, at the London headquarters of the Friend's Society in the center of the city.

Students may enroll for 12 to 16 credit hours. Courses will be offered in fine arts, political science, English, philosophy, and history—all centered around British culture.

The courses will be taught by faculty members of the Courtald Institute, London Polytechnic, University of London, Guilford College, Eastman's Polytechnic, Wellcome Institute and Elon College.

Under the leadership of Elon professor Will Mignialolo and Guilford professor Martha Cooley, the students will reside in the Hotel Edward and the Edward Apartments, near Hyde Park. Classes will be held four days a week providing three-day weekends. A two-week fall break is scheduled for October 11-27 to allow time for travel to the continent.

Rich said that his office has already begun to recruit students for the fall of '86. Students are accepted into the program if they have a sound grade point average and recommendation from a faculty member.

Waller Receives Faculty Award

"Teaching is the art of assisting discovery."—Mark van Doren

An inquiring mind, a thirst for truth, a respect for others—these are the methods Dr. Bruce Waller, assistant professor of philosophy, carries into the classroom and the methods that earned for him the 1984-85 Daniels-Danieley Award for Excellence in Teaching, Elon's most coveted award for faculty.

"His aim is always to share the knowledge and to encourage true learning," wrote one of Waller's students in nominating him for the award.

A colleague wrote, "Ever seeking to involve students in spirited discussion, he . . . displays the courage to follow arguments wherever they may lead."

Waller agrees that discussion suits his purposes best. "I am not so much concerned that the students who take my classes leave with a formed philosophy," he says. "I would prefer that they leave feeling less certain of what they believe.

"I hope the class will make them think more carefully and critically about their beliefs, will make them question whether their beliefs form a coherent and consistent set."

The classroom, in Waller's view, is "a good time to practice thinking." Hence, he uses discussion freely.

"I also find it worthwhile to listen to what the students have to say," he adds. "Very often they take angles on things that I hadn't seen before. They bring a different perspective."

Waller is a graduate of Louisiana Technical University. He received his master's and Ph.D. degrees in philosophy from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He has taught at Elon since 1978 and currently serves as chairman of the Department of Philosophy.

Waller retains an avid interest in research and writing. He has had several articles published in scholarly journals and is currently working on another, which, he says, is basically a defense of the logical-positivist approach to ethics.

Waller is the thirteenth recipient of the Daniels-Danieley Award, which was established by Dr. J. Earl Danieley and his wife, Verona Daniels Danieley, in honor of their parents.

THE ARTS

September

16-18 Central American Teach-In
Mooney Theater, 2 p.m.
The office of the Chaplain will begin a three-day teach-in that will attempt to present a balanced look at Central America's history and current struggles. An eight-member faculty committee will work with special guests to help increase public knowledge of Central America.

17 Experiment With Shakespeare
Whitley Auditorium, 2 p.m. and 7 p.m.
Dr. Robert Blake will present a video module of Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew. Blake's edited version of Franco Zeffirelli's production starring Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton will give a synopsis of scenes edited out. The 50 minute video module enables the complete plot of the play to be shown in one class period.

25 N.C. Shakespeare Festival
Whitley Auditorium, 8 p.m.
In its eight years, the North Carolina Shakespeare Festival has earned the reputation of being one of the state's premier theatre companies. The N.C. Shakespeare Festival's OUTREACH Program will present William Shakespeare's rollicking comedy, The Taming of the Shrew.

30 Orchestra Concert
Whitley Auditorium, 7 p.m.
In Celebration of the 300th birthdays of Bach and Handel, the Department of Fine Arts will present an orchestra concert featuring selections of their music. Bach's "Concerto for Two Pianos" will be performed by faculty members, Dr. Arlene Goter and Professor Robert King.

October

1 Fall Worship Service
Whitley Auditorium, 7 p.m.

7 Patricia Lust, soprano, and Rodney Reynerson, piano
Guest Recital
Whitley Auditorium, 7:30 p.m.
Dr. Lust of Longwood College and Dr. Reynerson of Appalachian State University will present a program of musical duets.

8 Frank Skinner, Liberal Arts Forum
Whitley Auditorium, 8 p.m.

10 Louis Budd, "Reconstruction of Huckleberry Finn."
Mooney Theatre, 7:30 p.m.
Dr. Louis J. Budd, professor of English at Duke University and a noted Mark Twain scholar, will address the Elon chapter of Sigma Tau Delta, the national English honor society.

11 Barbara Jacobson, flute
Faculty Recital
Whitley Auditorium,

20 Arlene Goter, piano
Faculty Recital
Whitley Auditorium, 8 p.m.

23 Betsy Cox, novelist
Whitley Auditorium, 7:30 p.m.
The Liberal Arts Forum presents Betsy Cox, author of the award-winning short story "The Land of Goshen" and the novel Familiar Ground.

24 Jim Houlick, saxophonist
Whitley Auditorium, 7 p.m.
Internationally known concert saxophonist Jim Houlick will present a program that includes music written especially for him as well as familiar saxophone literature. Houlick will present the same program he has planned for the Dock Street Theater in Charleston, S.C.

24-25 Readers Theater Performance
Directed by Ralph Kerns
Mooney Theater, 8 p.m.
Since the 60's, readers theater has become an in-depth means of presenting drama. Because of fewer distractions, the actors and audience have a better rapport and thus a greater understanding of the play.

30 Eve Cornelious and Chip Crawford, jazz duo
Whitley Auditorium, 8 p.m.
This artistic, versatile duo, voice and piano, has dazzled audiences throughout the Southeast and has gained a respected musical reputation. The duo will present jazz songs spanning the period from the 30's to 80's.

Alumni Chapter News

Fayetteville Alumni

On Saturday evening, June 1, about 30 alumni gathered for a party at the Green Valley Golf and Country Club in Fayetteville, North Carolina. This was the first alumni social held in this area in nearly a decade and represented the first step in re-establishing a viable chapter to serve this part of the state.

Several guests at this social were contemporaries who were pleasantly surprised to greet classmates they had not seen since their days at Elon. The group enjoyed a variety of "munchies" and danced on the terrace overlooking the 18th fairway to music provided by a disc jockey.

This social was organized by Cooper Mattocks '79 and promoted by several other local alumni. Plans are being made to sponsor an informal get-together later this year.

Other Summer Socials

At presentime the Suffolk and Virginia Beach chapters of the Elon College Alumni Association had filed plans to co-sponsor a social at the Suffolk Swimming Pool in Suffolk on Saturday evening, August 3. Suffolk Chapter President B.J. Riddick Cragger '76 and Virginia Beach President Henry Pittman '72 are in charge of the arrangements for this second annual affair for Tidewater Virginia Elon supporters. Chapter-sponsored gatherings may also be scheduled in Richmond, Charlotte, and Forsyth County, N.C. Alumni and friends of the college in all of these areas should watch their mail for the details.

Dr. John D. Messick '22 looks back on his long and distinguished career as an educator

By Moses Crutchfield

In the late 1930's and early 1940's when the main concern at Elon College was the ongoing fight for its financial life, one man was busy concentrating on preserving and enhancing academic standards, making certain that the vineyards of learning planted by the college's founders did not wither and die.

Ultimately, according to history's judgment, he achieved that goal, even surpassed it. Elon emerged from its financial tribulations with its academic standards intact. The groundwork was in place for the college to begin, when the time was propitious, a period of enormous growth, physically and academically.

The man whose work influenced Elon's future as a place of learning so greatly was Dr. John Decatur Messick, dean of his alma mater from 1935 until 1944. His service during those perilous times that encompassed the end of the Great Depression and the outbreak of World War II was a labor of love by his own words.

As testimony to his abilities as an educator, Dr. Messick later served a much larger institution as president for 13 years, was chairman of a highly important national collegiate committee and then capped a distinguished career in the field of higher education by planning and overseeing installation of the curriculum at one of America's unique universities. His record and achievements in education stand virtually alone among the list of Elon graduates who have chosen that field for a career.

Today, at age 87, Dr. Messick, by choice, lives alone in a two-bedroom apartment on the fringes of the Cape Fear Country Club golf course in Wilmington. His wife, the former Magdalene Robinson, died several years ago. Typical of his spirit of independence, he prefers his own residence to homes of his children. A daughter, Helen Margaret Willets (Mrs. Frederick), and son, John Messick, both live in Wilmington. Another daughter, Rose Melvin, (Mrs. Julius Lyman Melvin, Jr.), lives in Raleigh and another son, Norval, in San Francisc. A third son, a handicapped child, died in his teens.

Dr. Messick retains much of the erect and imposing bearing that was characteristic of him in younger days. In recent years, though, health problems have arisen. A detached retina cost sight in one eye. A year ago a congestive heart condition slowed his pace considerably. However, he still moves reasonably spritely and continues to drive his own car during daylight hours. The sharp, dry wit that one remembers from other days manifests itself from time to time attesting to his alertness.

In retrospect, Dr. Messick's responsibilities at Elon probably helped prepare him for greater ones later at what is now East Carolina University and at Oral Roberts University.

"Dr. (L.E.) Smith, Elon's president then, left the curriculum to me," said Dr. Messick. "I worked with each department separately, giving each man an opportunity to present his own ideas. After thorough evaluation, the ideas, if good enough, would be presented to the faculty which approved or rejected them. In this way we improved the curriculum. Most of the courses of study were good when I came to Elon but we made improvement a continuing process."

Dr. Messick commented, "We had a good faculty when I was at Elon. We had more than our share of doctorates. It was a strong faculty."

And, continuing, "Professor (A.L.) Hook served as dean before I went to Elon. He moved over to the office of registrar when I came. What his feelings were, I don't know, but there was never a cross word between the two of us. He certainly was one of the finest people I've ever known."

Dr. Messick tells the story of how he got back to Elon as a member of the faculty at the college he was graduated from in 1922 at the age of 25:

"In the summer of 1934, I was teaching at the Northern Presbyterian College in Asheville. Meanwhile, I was looking for a college position. I had heard of one in Florida and I visited there one weekend. They liked me and I liked them and I accepted an associate professorship to begin in the fall.

"When I returned to Asheville, I found a letter from Dr. Smith requesting that I meet him in a hotel in Salisbury the next Saturday afternoon, which I did. The job that was open was that of dean. When I arrived in Salisbury, Mrs. Smith was with her husband and we talked together for a while. Then she smiled broadly and excused herself so Dr. Smith and I could talk alone. Later, she told me the smile was to let Dr. Smith know that she approved. She was a great gal!

"Inasmuch as I was a graduate of Elon, the job was special to me. We were happy there. I loved Elon then and still do. I regarded the job of academic dean as a challenge."

That, quite possibly, was the reason Dr. Messick settled upon the Elon job when he might have sought and secured other positions that were higher in prestige and paid more than the $3,500 annual salary. After finishing at Elon, Dr. Messick did summer school work at UNC—Chapel Hill, Columbia and finally New York University where he received his doctorate in education in 1934. At NYU, he chalked up all "A" grades and received a letter stating that he was one of the best graduate students they had ever had. At that time, 31,000 students were enrolled in the university. Later on, Dr. Messick was president of the NYU Alumni Association.

Dr. Messick came to Elon as a student from Aurora in the eastern part of the state because at the time he wanted to become a minister. In thumbing through college magazines, he came across one on Elon, liked what he saw, arranged a conference with Dr. W.A. Harper, then president, and "loved him."

"The first year at Elon I took New Testament Greek and New Testament from the chairman of the department, Dr. (J.U) Newman, probably as good a teacher as I ever knew," he noted.

When Dr. Messick left Elon in 1944 to become dean at New Jersey State Teachers college in Montclair, N.J., a situation was brewing at East Carolina Teachers College in Greenville that eventually would bring his return to his native state. East Carolina, once mainly a teachers college for women, was experiencing all kinds of problems, including a financial scandal. Several educators were given a shot at straightening out the situation but none fully succeeded. Finally, when Dr. Dennis Cooke, a former president at High Point College, who had made some strides, gave up, Dr. Messick was called upon to take the job. He accepted and left Montclair, taking with him a former Marine, Leo Jenkins, who became his dean at East Carolina. Jenkins later succeeded Messick as president.

There is no question but what Dr. Messick laid out the course for East Carolina's emergence as a full-fledged university, complete with a four-year medical school. True, it was Dr. Jenkins who later aligned the political forces and battled the legislature for establishment of the medical school, but it was Dr. Messick who did the preliminary work. He was the first to envision a two-year medical school as a possibility, for example.

As early as 1953, he was telling the legislature that East Carolina should be permitted to assume the proportions of a university. He did succeed in getting the name changed from East Carolina Teachers College to East Carolina College. For the first time, master's degrees were offered in the liberal arts program. The basic science program was strengthened, and a huge extension service was instituted with special attention to the Cherry Point and Camp Lejeune Marine bases. Eventually, the off-campus program included 22 centers.

Admission standards were advanced during Dr. Messick's tenure and enrollment soared from 1,600 students to 6,500 in 13 years. The college became the first in the southeast to offer courses via commercial television. Dr. Messick, incidentally, was in the forefront of those participating in the successful effort to get Voice of America transmitters located in Greenville.

Obstacles frequently popped up to hinder Dr. Messick's efforts to bring adequate facilities to the East Carolina campus. For, example, early-on he was able to get funds for a new library. That was fine, but, because of the war, no structural steel was available on the market. After Gov. Kerr Scott and his administrative assistant D.S. Coltrane, were unable to do anything about the situation, Dr. Messick approached an acquaintance and friend in high government circles. The result was East Carolina's first new building under Dr. Messick.

Getting money out of the legislature frequently was a hassle, too. On one occasion, Dr. Messick sent several pretty co-eds to Raleigh, armed with baskets of camellia blooms to pin on the lapels of legislators, hoping they would give favorable attention to bills affecting East Carolina.

"It took a lot of fighting and much persuasion to get appropriations for improvements to the campus," he remarked. Yet, as the college grew, he continued to add new dormitories and other buildings to the college's facilities.

Eventually, the legislative battles took their toll. Saying he was, "Tired of being tired," Dr. Messick handed in his resignation effective in early 1960. His work and his leadership were saluted by the press and by powerful political figures, but to him, the most touching, meaningful tribute came from the East Carolina student newspaper:

> "By pouring himself heart and soul into his work, he built a little teacher's college into one of the finest places of learning in the state...."

"By pouring himself heart and soul into his work, he built a little teachers college into one of the finest places of learning in the state. . . he is great because he cared."

In 1981, the university dedicated an enlarged and refurbished theater arts center "to one of the most dynamic and colorful leaders in the institution's 74-year history."

While at East Carolina, Dr. Messick came to know S. Lee Braxton, mayor of the nearby town of Whiteville and chairman of the board of First National Bank there. That acquaintanceship led to a series of happenings that capped the career of Dr. Messick as an educator.

After leaving East Carolina, Dr. Messick worked briefly with the U.S. Office of Education, supervising its activities in the southeastern states. Then, he was persuaded to go to work for Congress as a research specialist. From there, he came out of retirement to serve as dean of instruction at Vermont State College, where he was handed the assignment of revising the college's curriculum.

Meanwhile, Braxton, the former mayor, made his fortune and joined up as an associate of Evangelist Oral Roberts. When Roberts decided to found and build his university in Tulsa, one of his needs was for a person with expert knowledge of a university's curriculum and of how buildings should be planned for greatest efficiency in teaching. Braxton thought immediately of his old friend, Dr. Messick.

For a while, Dr. Messick served as consultant and retained his position at Vermont State, but in July 1963 he joined Oral Roberts as dean and executive vice president of a university that at the moment was little more than a dream. It was here that Dr. Messick did what he calls his "most creative work."

His responsibilities included developing the curricula, composing the college catalog and faculty handbook, setting standards for student admission and devising various bulletins. He interviewed and recommended faculty and personnel employment and advised with the architects on the appointments of various buildings.

Dr. Messick reached deep into his years of experience to make the university one of the country's most-up-to-date in the way of curriculum and facilities. His experience as a member of the National Accreditation Committee of the American Association of Colleges and Universities carried him onto campuses across the country. He gleaned the best of ideas from that experience and combined them with others he had left over from his days as superintendent of the Spencer schools and as a principal at Trenton and South River.

The result was the crown jewel of the Oral Roberts University campus, the John D. Messick Learning Resources Center. It's a unique six-story learning complex with a highly sophisticated information and retrieval system for both students and professors. It provides four-and-one-half acres of classroom, library, offices and other related facilities. One of its features is an electronic projection system whereby a professor can call up or record whatever he desires. Lectures are on tape. Two electrical engineers were engaged to carry out Dr. Messick's ideas. The completed $10-million building was called by the Ford Foundation: "one of the most creative facilities on the American campus today."

From out of an experience at the age of 19, Dr. Messick developed a strong, life-long philosophy of religion. Thus, a conflict between his intellectual and Roberts' fundamental approach to the spiritual might have been expected.

"I see no contradiction in religion and intellectuality," said Dr. Messick. "Basically all religious denominations believe in Christ. I know there is a heaven. I know there is a Christ. I never feel alone. I know that He is with me. If intellect puts those beliefs there, then what is the contradiction?"

Dr. Messick tells the story of how he once kidded Oral Roberts that if he (Roberts) would like to transfer to the Methodist Church without a ministerial degree, then "I might be able to get the conference to accept him. He took me up on it and today is a member of the largest Methodist church in Tulsa, although he never changed his faith in action."

Later Oral Roberts wrote: "We are so very grateful and we give God thanks for finding you at a very strategic time in the life of Oral Roberts University. Your contacts, your experience, your know-how and ability were the things that put us on the right track. You helped us lay a good foundation and our strong academic courses are due to your great strength."

In retirement, Dr. Messick is as active as health permits. He is a member of a number of organizations and earned a national 10-year award for service to add to the many accorded him in his career. He is close to his children, grandchildren and great grandchildren. He is happy about Elon's growth and thinks that church-related colleges will survive and should be kept distinctive.

Of his life, he says, "I don't know that I would do anything differently if it could be done over today."

A key to that life might be found in a statement by Aristotle long ago: "All who have meditated on the art of governing mankind have been convinced that the fate of empires depends on the education of youth."

The Year in Review

By Alan Wooten '87

Even without a national championship or the Joby Haven Cup, Elon made great strides in its athletic program during 1984-85 and the advances will continue to show next year.

Baseball

The biggest story of the year was the Elon baseball team. The Christians were picked to finish second in the conference and district races. With a never-say-die attitude, the Christians romped through league opposition to the regular season Carolinas Conference and NAIA District 26 titles. They began tournament play by winning the District 26 tourney and then finishing second in the Area VII tournament, after losing the first game of the double elimination affair.

Receiving an at-large berth into the NAIA National Championship Finals in Lewiston, Idaho, Elon finished seventh in the ten-team field. In the final poll by the NAIA the Christians were ranked fifth. Head Coach, Rick Jones, in his first year at Elon, led the team to a 40-10 record and was Coach of the Year in the conference and district. Many observers of Elon baseball over the years have called this the greatest team ever fielded.

Maurice Morton, senior from Graham, N.C., set records for career runs (126), career hits (185), career stolen bases (113), and stolen bases in a season (58). Pitcher John Driscoll set a new career record at Elon with 26 wins, breaking a 55-year-old record set by C.V. "Lefty" Briggs in the late 20s. Morton and junior Greg Harris were drafted by the San Diego Padres of the National League.

In national tournament play, Elon opened by dropping a 6-1 decision to the College of St. Francis from Joliet, Il. The Christians were the victims of four inning-ending doubleplays. Driscoll took the loss while David Terry and Jerry Russell, two promising freshmen, had two hits each.

On Tuesday, Elon returned to winning side of the ledger, passing Southern Maine, 11-5. Elon jumped ahead 10-1 and never looked back. Pete Gibson and Budgie Clark had three hits each and Troy Harris added two and three runs batted in. One of Harris' hits was a booming 400-foot homerun over the scoreboard in rightfield. Greg Harris notched the victory, his ninth of the season.

On Friday, Elon met with the big "E" elimination. Georgia College used a first-inning grand slam and a seventh-inning three-run homerun to put Elon away. Troy Harris added another homerun in rightfield and Russell drove in the other run with a double off the wall in leftfield. Greg McDannold, despite some good moments, took the loss on the mound.

Elon head coach Rick Jones offered nothing but praise for his team. "We accomplished a lot of things out in Idaho. We proved we can play some good baseball against some of the finest teams in the country. Our goal now is to try and rebuild our pitching staff and make the trip back to Lewiston next year."

Soccer

Elon also won a conference title in soccer and received its first All-American in the sport when Joe Nepay was named to the third team. Head coach Steve Ballard was named Coach of the Year in the conference and district while Nepay was Player of the Year. The team finished 11-7-1 and should contend for the conference and district titles this fall.

Basketball

Elon had another Player of the Year in the Winter when Robert Leak received the honor in basketball. Since then, Coach Bill Morningstar has done some excellent recruiting, including the signing of Warren Wallace from Clemson, and Elon should field an excellent team next year.

Football

Elon won the NAIA District 26 football title in the fall. The Christians were unable to make the playoffs but finished 7-3 and were ranked 13th in the nation. Royce Fentress was the District Player of the Year and was drafted by the USFL Birmingham Stallions. Fentress was also a first team All-American and received Elon's highest athletic honor in the Basnight Award.

Golf

Elon's golf team also did well this year. Although failing to make the playoffs for the first time since 1975, the Christians were ranked in the top ten all year. Elon was the victim of fluke weather in the district tournament and missed the trip to Phoenix by two strokes. Tom Martine and Barry Filson were named to All-Conference and All-District teams.

Publications Win Awards

The Elon College Sports Information Department under the direction of Steve Ballard and with the assistance of Alan Wooten, has received four national awards during the past year.

The NAIA Sports Information Directors' Association named Elon's football program third best in the nation in Division I competition. It was the fourth time in five years the football program has been recognized in the top three in the nation. Elon's basketball program was also judged to be sixth best in Division I competition for basketball programs, the first time since 1978-79 it has received an award.

At the College Sports Information Directors' Association convention, Elon received two more awards. The South Atlantic Conference (SAC-8) Media Guide was selected as the top program, while the football program for Elon was fifth. Elon served as the SAC-8 News Bureau for the past year.

Myers '78 Returns as Coach

By Alan Wooten '87

Jackie Myers, Elon '78, has been named to succeed Mary Jackson as the new women's basketball coach at Elon. Myers, who played collegiately for Jackson in the late seventies, will also coach the softball team and teach in the school's physical education department.

Myers come to Elon from Carolinas Conference foe Pfeiffer College, having served as head basketball coach there since 1982. Before that, Myers was head coach at Williams High School from 1980-82 and assistant coach at East Tennessee State from 1978-80, during which time she earned her master's degree in physical education.

While at Elon, Myers was a three-sport star in volleyball, basketball, and softball. She was named All-

Conference for basketball in her final two years and was All-Conference in softball in her senior campaign when Elon garnered the AIAW State Softball Championship, defeating Carolina for the title. Elon, along with the other smaller schools in North Carolina, has since changed its women's program to NAIA. "I'm looking forward to coming back," said Myers.

WHICH WILL IT BE?

ACCORDING TO YOUR WILL . . . or according to arbitrary state laws?

If you have not exercised one of the most precious rights you have as an American citizen, the right to make a will and dispose of your property in accordance with your own personal wishes, then you should see a free booklet, Making Your Will, which we will send you without obligation on your part.

What can a will do for you? A will can:

- Provide for your property to be distributed in keeping with your wishes.
- Save unnecessary expenses in settling your estate.
- Name a guardian for minor children.
- In many cases, reduce or avoid estate taxes and future income taxes for beneficiaries.
- Create a trust or trusts to assure an adequate income for your spouse or other heirs, while protecting your estate against mismanagement or dissipation due to their inexperience or lack of interest in managing financial affairs.
- Provide a bequest to Elon College or any other charitable cause which you want to benefit from your estate.

Don't procrastinate or neglect to do what needs to be done. Before making or revising your will, write for the free booklet, Making Your Will...What You Should Know Before You See Your Lawyer.

USSR~You can get there from

By GREGG PAPPE

Dr. David Crowe, professor of history at Elon College, could be arrested for false advertising. He touts his yearly Russian expedition as a trip. It is not a trip, not in the ordinary sense of that word; it is an adventure—pure adventure. Mr. Webster defines trip as making a journey. He defines adventure as an exciting and remarkable experience. Actually, to be fair to both Dr. Crowe and Mr. Webster, the Russian offering could best be defined as an adventurous trip.

It is surely a journey. The 1985 group covered close to 20,000 miles in sixteen days, and journeyed back and forth through twelve time zones. There were days when we lived on time that was noon where we were but was midnight the day before at Elon College. Over this period of sixteen days we were involved in twelve to fourteen separate plane flights (depending on where one came from to get to New York), a 36-hour train ride through Siberia into Mongolia, and a 24-hour ride back into Siberia. Those of us who dealt with constant time adjustments, dragging luggage that constantly seemed to gain weight (yes, Virginia, there are souvenirs galore in the USSR and Mongolia), and keeping up with planes, trains, and buses can attest to the fact that this was definitely a journey.

On the other hand, it was definitely an adventure. Flying 450 miles into the Gobi Desert in a double prop plane that would land on a non-existent runway is adventure. Being stranded on a broken bus in that same desert and finally being rescued by three mongols who happened by in a jeep and who repaired the bus with a safety-pin and wire is strict adventure. Hearing soldiers walking on top of and scraping underneath your train, and looking out of the window and seeing soldiers carrying M1 rifles and looking grim at the border crossings is adventure. So is a Tibetan Buddhist worship experience, an opera sung in Russian with a chorus of 84 and a house that is burned on stage, children wanting chewing gum at every stop, and being stared at constantly by everyone (we felt, at times like the king who had no clothes). So this trip was also an adventure; truly an exciting and remarkable experience.

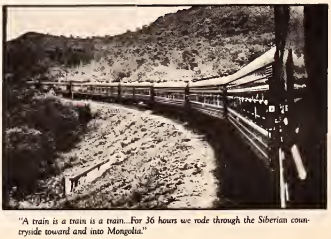
Why does one go to the Soviet Union and Outer Mongolia? Everyone knows that Outer Mongolia isn't real anyway. It is only a figment manufactured by those needing to threaten, such as, "If you don't shape up, I'm shipping you off to Outer Mongolia."

Why deliberately leave the conveniences of our society (I will never again take working plumbing and hot water for granted)? One reason is Dr. Crowe. Where else could a person find a leader that speaks fluent Russian, has taught the history of that country for years, and has made eleven trips into this rather formidable part of the world? His experience and expertise takes the trip out of the category of "tour" and places it into the category of "hands-on experience." What a bonus Dr. Crowe was! He had the unique talent of looking after the group without hovering, and of encouraging our own initiative and participation.

Oh the cities of this trip! Leningrad is beautiful with its waterways and its lovely cast iron railings that stand watch along these waterways. The city stands as a monument to man's struggles, having experienced the Decembersi uprising, the terrorist activities of the 1880's, and the seige of the Second World War. It is also a monument to man's love of the beautiful as preserved and exemplified in the Hermitage Art Museum, the Kirov Theatre, and St. Isaac's Cathedral.

Baku, a lovely sun-baked area bordering the Caspian Sea, was pure culture shock after cold, over-cast, snowy Leningrad. Suddenly we were transported into a Mediterranean climate and society; from the cool, reserved north to the warm relaxed south. It seemed strange that this belonged with the same country, and it was here that we began to grasp the size and diversity of the Soviet Union. We had a seven-course banquet, 14th-century style, complete with a rather strange, Turkish-sounding band that delighted in showing up periodically to play loudly as they stared at the ceiling and as we stared at them. Needless to say, it was wonderful then, but not quite so wonderful at 2 a.m. that same night when we assembled at the airport for our night flight to Asia and the town of Tashkent.

Russian ballet is spellbinding. We watched Swan Lake being performed in this central Asian city and each scene seemed a Degas painting come alive. The theatre performances we saw were first-rate whether they were of ballet, opera, or folk music. Each city has a children's theatre, and the arts are presented to the people from the time of their childhood. This is evident in the excellent attendance and attention at the performances. It must be added, however, that along with ballet, folk-tradition, and classics, rock is alive and well. It was an experience in schizophrenia when I awoke in the middle of the night on a train in the wilds of Siberia only to hear John Lennon's "Let It Be," or sat having dinner 450 miles into the Gobi Desert while listening to Jim Morrison. So much for suppression. The young will find a way.



"A train is a train is a train...For 36 hours we rode through the Siberian countryside toward and into Mongolia."

Irkutsk is pure Doctor Zhivago. Russian, wooden, unpainted houses with ornately carved trim and shutters of what can best be described as 'Williamsburg colors.' It was to here that many Decembrists were sent into exile and, because of this, became a 19th century cultural center. It was here that we quietly observed a Russian Orthodox ceremony in a small, ancient church. The shadows were alive with old women dressed in black scurrying from one altar to the next. Some good American Protestants and Catholics lit candles in this quiet, different place and wished for a peaceful world that would fit this holiness.

A train is a train is a train, and we experienced pure "train-ness." For 36-hours we rode through the Siberian countryside toward, and into Mongolia. The Soviet Union is massive in size and much of it is forest and unspoiled wilderness; miles and miles and acres and acres of birch trees. Never again will I see birch trees without remembering the beauty of Russia and, most particularly, the Siberian countryside.

Skirting around Lake Baikal, one of the largest and certainly the deepest lake in the world, we entered Mongolia and came to Ulan Bator. It was a trip into National Geographic. What is Mongolia? It is school children wearing white aprons and large smiles and playing the same games that our children play. It is music everywhere, and playing and singing together. It is Mongol dresses with sashes and boots, and it is horses and sheep, and camels, and a Buddhist monastery with the orange-robed lamas and the turning prayer wheels. It is the Gobi Desert that is the paradox of cold American Coca-Cola and ageless mountains of such rugged beauty that you feel you have been where time began; the Gobi desert of ice so cold and so thick that you can walk between its floes and disappear into its cold whiteness before coming out on the other edge; the Gobi Desert of sand dunes and sheep herders on patient camels that allow themselves to be ridden by this busload of curious foreigners. Mongolia is wonderous and different and gracious, and is an adventure. It could never be relegated to the name "trip."

"Never again will I see birch trees without remembering the beauty of Russia..."

Back to Irkutsk and a flight to Moscow that is longer than the flight from Helsinki to New York, overwhelms us. Moscow is full of green. A third of the city has been left in green, and birch trees are, once again, everywhere. Red Square is History. You stand and experience Russia. The Kremlin walls run along one side and form the backdrop for Lenin's tomb. The end is dominated by St. Basils Cathedral, a many-domed, bright, beautiful building, and G.U.M. Department Store forms the other boundary. The cobblestone square seems to echo with parades and politics and, even at night, is filled with strolling people who range from lovers to soldiers, from old women to children who look solemnly at these strange visitors to their city.

Day sixteen we tour Helsinki and fly home. Home, how wonderful and how welcome! We all look the same, though very tired, but we are not the same. We have taken a wonderous trip together, and we have seen things and experienced things that will always be a part of us now. We listen to "our" music. We glory in "our" freedom. We indulge in "our" luxuries, but we remember Irene and smile with love. We remember the people who sang and played with us. We remember champagne at breakfast on a train passing Lake Baikal. We remember Lenin everywhere. We remember the desert and the mountains and the birches. We remember sixteen days when we learned and grew...We remember Russia.

"Russian ballet is spellbinding. We watched Swan lake being performed in Tashkent and each scene seemed a Degas painting come alive."

Gregg Winn Ruppendick '85 returned to college in 1981 after a 26-year interruption. During her four years at Elon, she lost both her parents, and her husband was killed in an accident. Nevertheless, she finished her degree in philosophy with a perfect 4.0 average and was accepted by a number of graduate schools, including Harvard University. She requested a year's deferment from Harvard and is attending UNC-Chapel Hill and working part-time while she ponders her decision. She is the mother of three grown children.

Tryst with a Twist

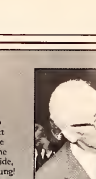
The Rev. Fletcher C. Lester, '18, was among Elon alumni who celebrated anniversaries in June, but his anniversary was quite out of the ordinary. Lester was married on June 17, 1984—his 90th birthday. His bride, Gertrude Dawson, was 77 years young! As if a wedding with a combined age of 167 years for the bride and groom were not enough, there was another detail that made their wedding different from most. It was a surprise wedding.

"No one knew," said Lester. "It was like running away to get married."

"Only we were running into a crowd," his wife added, laughing.

When Lester's two daughters planned a 90th birthday party for their father on that Sunday in 1984, they did not know that they were also planning a reception for his wedding. Only four people knew about Lester's wedding plans: his wife's son and daughter-in-law who flew in from Atlanta, a reporter from The High Point Enterprise and Lester's son-in-law, Paul Robinson, who performed the ceremony.

Lester and Mrs. Dawson had been dating for over a year and their children knew of and approved of their intentions to marry, but did not know they had specific plans.



Lester preached at the regular church service at First Congregational Christian Church of Christ in High Point on June 17, 1984, and Robinson ended the service.

After the closing hymn, "Bless Be the Tie That Binds," Robinson asked that the congregation remain seated. Then, recalled Mrs. Lester, "Fletcher came down the aisle, walked me to the front of the congregation, and we were married before they knew it."

After the wedding the new Mrs. Lester told The Enterprise, "You don't have to be young to enjoy marriage. If we only have two weeks together it will be marvelous."

'69 Grad Makes History

Bart Shaw ranks among the leading young American historians, according to Dr. Robert Delp of the Elon Department of Social Science.

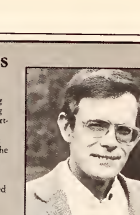
Shaw recently received the Fredrick Jackson Turner Award presented by the Organization of American Historians. The award, the organization's most prestigious, was given to Shaw as the author of the best first book published by an American historian.

His book, The Wool Hat Boys: Georgia's Populist Party, recreates the world and attitudes of the Georgia Populist Party in the nineteenth century.

"Shaw's book painstakingly recreates the world of the Georgia Populists, and in so doing overturns long accepted views about the nature of the people who made up that important branch of southern populism," said the Organization of American Historians committee that selected his book for the award.

Shaw shares the 1985 Fredrick Jackson Turner Award with Sean Wilentz, whose first book is Chants Democratic: New York City and the Rise of the American Working Class. The two books, "will change the way we look at nineteenth century America," said the committee.

Both Shaw and Wilentz received a medal and a cash prize from the organization.



Shaw, being a loyal alumnus, wrote to several of his history professors to tell them of his award. In a letter to Dr. Durward Stokes, '64, he wrote, "You perhaps don't realize the profound influence you and your colleagues have had on me. In fact, I look upon you all as invisible authors of the book."

After graduating from Elon, Shaw earned his master's degree at the University of Wisconsin. He received his Ph.D. at Emory University and is now a professor of history at Cedar Crest College in Allentown, Pa.

Elon Journalists Outnumber UNC's

Elon journalism graduates are in the news again.

In a recent article in the Burlington Daily Times-News, editor Don Bolden reported that for the first time Elon journalism graduates outnumbered UNC School of Journalism graduates in the paper's newsroom. Bob Nowell, assistant professor of communications and the person in charge of the Elon journalism program since the retirement of Dr. Mary Ellen Priestley, is justifiably proud.

When Bolden's article was written, four recent Elon graduates were writing for the Times-News: Doug Norwood '84, Mari Behrend '82, Jo Craven '85, and Felicia Fogleman '85. Norwood serves as weekend editor; Craven, a former editor of The Pendulum, is a reporter; and Fogleman is a writer in the paper's Living Department.

Behrend, who was also in the Living Department, has since accepted a position as an editor and writer of government contracts for the VSE Corporation in Alexandria, Va.

Professor Nowell also reports on the status of two other journalism graduates. Penny Thomas, 1984-85 editor of The Pendulum, is writing for The Pilot in Southern Pines, NC., edited by Sam Ragan. Carol Nix is employed by Carolina Biological Supply Company as a production assistant in the Scientific Publications Department.

ELON COLLEGE HONOR ROLL OF DONORS 1984-85

1984-85 Annual Report

$7.3 million PRIDE campaign, new programs highlight year

On May 31, 1985, Elon College completed the most successful fund-raising campaign in its 96-year history. The PRIDE II Campaign, Providing Resources for Institutional Development at Elon, raised $7.3 million for improvements, endowments and operating expenses, substantially more than its original goal of $5.7 million.

"To exceed the goal is extremely gratifying," said President Fred Young. "It is an indication that alumni, parents and friends share our vision of overall excellence for Elon College.

"It is also a tribute to fine management of this campaign and the hard work on the part of many volunteers. We are grateful to all who made this accomplishment possible."

Dr. James B. Powell served as general chairman of the campaign. Other members of the steering committee included Ernest A. Koury, Sr., Major and Special Gifts Committee chairman; Royall H. Spence, Jr., Trustee Committee chairman; Dr. J. Earl Danieley, Area and Special Campaigns Committee chairman; and C.A. McIver, Burlington area chairman; Sherrill Hall, chairman of the Board of Trustees Development Committee; and David T. Rutledge, Public Relations Advisory Committee Chairman.

Money for a new fine arts center was a major goal of the PRIDE II campaign. Campaign pledges and gifts which may be used for the new center totaled $2.8 million, enough to construct the first phase of the building, which consists of music classrooms and a recital hall.

College officials are now negotiating a plan that would allow construction of both phases of the center. The second phase consists of art and drama facilities and includes an auditorium. A decision on the construction plans and a date for ground-breaking are expected soon.

A $250,000 challenge grant from the Kresge Foundation played a key role in the fine arts center fund-raising. Elon donors gave $975,000 in response to the challenge.

PRIDE II gifts and pledges to the college endowment totaled over $2 million. This amount included scholarships, professorships, departmental endowments and a $250,000 addition to the Spence Library Endowment, a gift from Mr. Royall Spence, Sr. and the late Mrs. Spence, and Mr. and Mrs. Royall Spence, Jr. Sixty new scholarship endowments were established as a result of PRIDE II.

Nearly $1 million was raised for physical plant enhancements. This amount included gifts from Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Chandler, the late Reid Maynard and his wife, Grace Moore Maynard, and Mr. and Mrs. Royal Spence, Jr., to name Chandler, Maynard and Colclough Halls, respectively. The Bakatsias family of Burlington gave $50,000 to build a new soccer field which bears their name.

Finally $1.4 million was given to support the college's Annual Fund and Athletic Scholarship Fund during PRIDE II. Together, these funds provide general operating support for the total college, as well as scholarship funding for athletes.

The other big giving news of the year was the increase in the percentage of alumni making gifts to the college. In 1984-85 that figure rose to 38.7%, surpassing Duke, Wake Forest and Davidson and ranking Elon second in the state in percentage of alumni participation. More details may be found elsewhere in this issue. Two other giving records were established in 1984-85: Annual Fund gifts from alumni exceeded $100,000 for the first time and total private giving surpassed $2 million.

Admissions Standards Show Increase

In a speech outlining Centennial goals to the faculty in September 1984, President Fred Young announced that requirements for admission to Elon would be gradually raised over the next four years.

The first increment came in 1984, with a highly successful outcome. A slightly higher admission standard for entering 1984-85 students resulted in a substantial increase in the number of students rejected. Despite that fact, the college has a record enrollment of 2794.

Increases in the number of students applying for admission made that achievement possible. Since 1982 the number of applications received has risen over 40%, enabling the college to be more selective.

Standards were tightened again for the 1985-86 year. In July, 1985 rejections were running 70% higher than in July, 1984; however, with the increased number of applications, the enrollment for fall 1985 was expected to remain stable.

The strengthening of admission standards is a part of an overall goal to place the college "at the top among the private institutions in the state with similar missions" by the Centennial.

MBA, New Majors Added to Academic Program

The enrollment of the first students in Elon's MBA program and the addition of two new majors to the curriculum highlighted the 1984-85 academic year.

Local professionals and recent college graduates greeted the MBA program enthusiastically. Thirty degree candidates were admitted to the program in the fall and an additional nine in the spring, exceeding expectations for the first year. MBA classes are offered four evening each week; 36 semester-hours credit is required to earn the degree.

The communications program at Elon took another step forward in 1984 with the creation of majors in mass communication (radio and television) and journalism. A videotaping classroom in Mooney Building was converted into a full-fledged television production studio and equipment was purchased equivalent to that owned by most small television studios and many larger institutions.

Communications students went immediately into production. Throughout the year, they and their professors produced a weekly half-hour television show for local access cable channels entitled "Elon in Review."

The new journalism major is a modification of the previous English-journalism major, a strong program at Elon for many years. The addition of typesetting and word-processing capabilities is now enhancing the professional preparation of students in that field. Both new communications majors at Elon emphasize strong writing skills.

Perhaps the most exciting development of the academic year was the scheduling of Elon's first full semester of foreign study.

Beginning in fall, 1985, Elon students will have the fall semester studying in London, England, all for the regular price of tuition, room and board, plus air fare.

Students will stay at a London hotel, take classes taught by British and American professors, have access to University of London library facilities and have plenty of time for extra travel. The popular Winter Term in England will continue to operate as in the past, giving Elon students a choice of foreign study opportunities.

Elon's teacher education program was reaccredited by the N.C. State Department of Public Instruction during the past year. In preparation for the reaccreditation visit, the Department of Education conducted an exhaustive self-study and made several changes. Among the new features: a full-semester of student teaching, a middle grades majors, sophomore level practicum, and a Curriculum Resources Center stocked with complete sets of state-adopted and supplementary texts, various teaching aids and a microcomputer with appropriate software. The changes keep Elon in the vanguard of current statewide efforts to ensure well-trained teachers.

Writing is no longer the property of the English department as a result of the successful implementation of Elon's writing-across-the-curriculum program in 1984-85. Following a kick-off workshop led by nationally known writing consultant Elaine Maimon, 33 faculty members representing all disciplines used writing assignments and activities as a way of teaching the subject matter in their field. The successful program has attracted the attention of other colleges and universities, and project director Dr. Whitney Vanderwerff has conducted a number of workshops to teach the writing-across-the-curriculum methods.

From the President

It is a pleasure to present the 1984-85 Elon College Honor Roll of Donors.

I encourage you to read the report on the year's activities that accompanies the Honor Roll. The accomplishments outlined in that report are the work of your gifts. Through your support of Elon College you are helping to fashion the best possible education for the young men and women enrolled here, one which prepares them for a career and for life.

We are indebted to you for your generosity to Elon. Your commitment increases our sense of responsibility and we pledge to you our best efforts to use your gifts thoughtfully and wisely.

Religious, Cultural Life Programs Expand

To stimulate student interest and attendance, all Elon cultural and intellectual activities were centralized under the coordination of Dr. George Troxler during 1984-85. The result was an outstanding year featuring over 50 programs ranging from the N.C. Shakespeare Festival production of The Merry Wives of Windsor, which packed Whitley Auditorium, to a speech by Fatal Vision author Joe McGinnis, which drew an overflow crowd of nearly 700.

The religious life program also continued to grow during the past year. In addition to the many religious organizations which held regular meeting on campus, the new chaplain, Rev. Richard McBride, offered bi-weekly chapel services, a Wednesday morning devotion for faculty and staff, and vespers on Wednesday evenings.

Six new student organizations were added to the list of Elon student activities in 1984-85. They included Young Democrats and Young Republicans clubs, a commuter student organization and three departmental societies.

Physical Facility Grows to Keep Pace

To accomodate the growth in other areas, physical plant facilities were added, expanded and renovated during the past academic year. Three units housing 128 students were added to the Jordan Center complex, bringing to 428 the number of beds added at Elon in the past three years. Rakatsias Soccer Field was completed on the northern extreme of the campus, giving the Elon soccer team a superior playing facility.

Program facilities added in 1984-85 included a new greenhouse on the corner of O'Kelly and Lebanon Avenues; a television production studio/classroom in Mooney; the Curriculum Resources Center, also in Mooney; and a new computer lab and additional computer equipment in Alamance Building. Moonelon Conference Center located near the college was purchased and renovated. Renamed The Lodge, that facility serves as a recreation and conference area for faculty, staff and students.

Also during the past year, the college installed its own telephone system, serving all faculty and staff offices and over 1200 students. New sections of brick walkways were added within the walled campus, and remodeling was done in Duke Building, both dining halls, Beck Pool, and the Special Collections Room of McEwen Library.

Elon Alumni Top Wake and Davidson

For the 1984-1985 fiscal year, 38.7 percent of all Elon alumni donated a record $100,000+ to the annual fund.

We did it! When the final figures were tallied, Elon College alumni found themselves in the top position among all coed colleges and universities in North Carolina in the percentage of alumni who make an annual donation to their school. Not only did the alumni topple Davidson and Wake Forest in gaining the top spot; they also claimed 1,000 new alumni donors for the third year in a row. During those three years, alumni participation increased an incredible 186 percent. Also, total donations to the Annual Fund in 1984-85 exceeded the $100,000 mark for the first time. That dollar amount represented a 64 percent increase over three years ago.

Elon's Director of Alumni Giving, Dr. Jerry R. Tolley, was elated. "There is one thing for certain about Elon alumni," said Tolley. "They love a challenge and when one is issued they respond."

In establishing the record participation percentage, Elon's Golden Alumni led the way as 49 percent made donations. This elite group includes all those alumni who are members of the Class of '35 or earlier. For the second straight year the Class of '36 led all classes as it recorded a participation ratio of 72 percent. The Classes of '24, '25, and '38 followed closely with participations percentages of 67 percent, 63 percent, and 60 percent respectively. There were ten additional classes who gained over 50 percent participation. They were the Classes of '13, '14, '15, '17 '26, '27, '29, '34, '36, and '40. In all there were 45 classes whose participation ratio was 40 percent.

The more recent classes, although not claiming the higher participation percentages, did establish a standard of their own as every class from 1969 to the present had over 100 donors. To see what your class's participation ratio is, see the Honor Roll of Donors.

Parents and friends of Elon also increased their level of support in 1984-85. In fact, 991 parents of currently enrolled students (38.5 percent) contributed over $33,000 to Elon.

Friends of the college continued their generous support to Elon as 1,171 friends made contributions, an 8 percent increase over the previous year.

In reviewing the annual giving year, James P. Elder, Jr. '60, 1984-1985 Annual Fund Chairman, stated, "This has indeed been a remarkable giving year for Elon College. I'm extremely proud of the alumni as they have set standards of giving, both in alumni participation and dollars donated. We can all be proud of beating both Wake Forest and Davidson and gaining the top spot in alumni participation among coed colleges and universities in North Carolina."

Zeta And Kappa Sigma Win In Greek Contest

The 1985 Greater Greek First Annual Alumni Participation Award was claimed by Zeta Tau Alpha Sorority with a record-setting 50.3 percent of their former sisters making a donation to the Elon College Annual Fund. Following close behind was the Kappa Sigma Fraternity, who recorded 84 percent increase in donors over the previous year. Their second-place percentage of participation was 49.7 percent.

The Phi Mu and Sigma Sigma Sigma sororities both gained a participation percentage of 48.6. Alpha Sigma Alpha sisters were fourth in the sorority race as 48.3 percent of their alumnae made gifts. Their 103 percent participation increase over the previous year gave them the lead over all Greeks in the increased performance category.

In the fraternity race, the Kappa Alpha-Kappa Psi Nu boys came in second with a 47.9 percent participation ratio, edging out the Tau Kappa Epsilon brothers who stood at 44.3 percent. Sigma Phi Epsilon and Sigma Pi recorded 40.8 percent and 40.5 percent respectively.

The race for the Greek Participation Award was much closer than anticipated. In fact a margin of only four donors separated Sigma Sigma Sigma, Phi Mu, Alpha Sigma Alpha, and Kappa Sigma from receiving the winner's trophy.

Although not eligible for the award the old Iota Tau Kappa Fraternity turned in the best performance overall as 55.8 percent of these alumni donations. For 1984-85 fiscal year, total Greek participation was an impressive 47 percent, 10 percent higher than the percentage for all alumni.

Dr. Jerry R. Tolley, Elon's Director of Corporate and Annual Resources was most pleased with the performance of the Greek alumni and stated: "The First Annual Greater Greek Participation Challenge was a grand success. In fact, it was through their significant increase in participation that Elon is claiming the number one position among all the coed colleges and universities in North Carolina. The fraternities and sororities increased their percentages of participation from 31.9 percent in 1983-1984 to 47 percent in 1984-1985. We congratulate them on their outstanding record."

GIVING CLUBS

Special recognition is given to Elon College donors who make significant gifts for the Annual Fund, academic scholarships and awards, academic program support, endowment, and capital projects. Membership in the ORDER OF THE OAK is awarded to alumni and friends who have contributed $100,000 to Elon through the new ELON LIFE FOR ENDOWMENT program. The CHAIRMAN'S COUNCIL honors donors who gave $5,000 or more. Membership in the PRESIDENT'S CLUB is extended to those individuals who contribute $1000-$4999. A contribution of $500-$999 entitles donors to membership in the OAK CLUB. The A.L. HOOK CLUB membership consists of those who have contributed $100-$499. The amount of an individual's total gifts for all eligible purposes during the fiscal year ending May 31, 1987 determines the qualifications for giving club membership.

The Holmes Endowment Fund: Better Things through Chemistry

In the late 1930's, Tommy Holmes from Snow Hill was an outstanding chemistry student in the Elon College classroom of Dr. Ned Brannock.

Today, G. Thomas Holmes is a retired executive of the Aluminum Company of America (ALCOA) and a member of the Elon College Board of Trustees.

Holmes, as have so many other Elon grads, built upon the sound and creditable preparation he received in a traditionally strong program for a highly successful career as a chemical engineer. That solid foundation helped propel him into the top echelons of one of America's largest firms.

Now, through the G. Thomas Homes and Gladys Wright Holmes Endowment for Chemistry with a funding of $75,000, that department will be better equipped than ever for preparing chemistry majors who plan to pursue graduate studies or who seek to enter the workforce.

Income from the endowment becomes available for use for the first time during the 1985-86 academic year. According to terms of the endowment, income will be used at the discretion of the department to prepare pre-engineering students for admittance to professional engineering schools. Any funds not spent for those purposes will revert to the endowment principal.

According to Dr. J. Earl Daneley, Thomas E. Powell, Jr., Professor, the money comes at a propitious time.

"The cost of scientific equipment has increased very rapidly within the last few years," he explains. "In first place, there is much instrumentation considered essential in the undergraduate program which did not exist a few years ago. Equipment which has been utilized in the laboratory for many years now costs two to three times the prices of a few years ago."

Further, Dr. Daneley continued, "College and universities are finding it difficult to underwrite the cost of all the needed equipment for work in the natural sciences. Elon is very fortunate to have this endowment fund to supplement our other resources and to assist us in our efforts to provide modern, state-of-the-art equipment for our students."

There are many ways Elon alumni can help their alma mater in the highly competitive field of education. The generosity of Tommy Holmes, class of '39, and of Gladys Wright Holmes, class of '41, certainly enhances Elon's position for attracting quality students.

The Lineberger Scholarship Fund: An Excellent Match

Mrs. Virginia Lineberger Rogers of Charlotte, a member of the class of 1932, and her husband, Hurley D. Rogers, decided in 1983 to make a gift to Elon that would honor her parents. The resulting Luther A. and Georgia V. Lineberger Scholarship Fund at Elon is an excellent example of how an alumnus can work through a matching gift program to establish a fitting memorial to a loved one.

The Lineberger connections with Elon are strong. Four of the Lineberger children attended Elon College. In addition to Mrs. Rogers, the others were her sisters, Mrs. Mary L. White (Mary E. Lineberger '31) and Mrs. Margaret E. Bumgarner (Margaret Lineberger '31), and a brother, L. Alexander Lineberger, Jr. '38. His wife, Emma Woodson Lineberger '37, also attended Elon.

As a retired official of the Exxon Corporation, Mr. Rogers qualified under the matching gift program of the Exxon Educational Foundation. Today, because Mr. and Mrs. Rogers made use of the opportunity afforded by the foundation, Mr. Luther A. and Georgia V. Lineberger Memorial Scholarship Fund is already established and students are receiving more substantial benefits than would have been possible without the Exxon participation in the gift.

Many of the nation's leading corporations, convinced that support of higher education is important, encourage employees to contribute to their alma maters through matching gift programs.

These programs, in many instances, make it possible for alumni to establish significant memorials quickly and effectively. Through matching gifts, donors can increase the value of their contributions considerably.

Some 902 Elon alumni—nearly 10%— are eligible for participation in matching gifts programs sponsored by their employers.

The Cast Upon: Helping To Build Excellence

When he established a foundation in 1943, textile giant Charles Cannon could not have known that his charitable institution would assist Elon College in becoming "A Place of Infinite Possibilities." However, this is precisely the case. Over several decades the millions of dollars generated by the college from private foundations have given Elon a qualitative "edge," and the Cannon Foundation has been one of its most steady benefactors.

Mr. Cannon established his Foundation as textile mills began placing principal emphasis upon medical care, community funds, higher and secondary education, youth agencies, and church support. In addition, he anticipated that the Foundation's activities would be confined largely to North Carolina.

The Cannon Foundation, a substantial benefactor of Elon for many years, has met its founder's expectation through the awarding of scholarships and capital improvement grants to the institution. Its gift of $50,000 toward the construction of the fine arts center is the latest illustration of its generosity.

Today, under the presidency of Mrs. Miriam C. Hayes, Mr. Cannon's daughter, the Foundation continues to provide support to North Carolina institutions of higher education. Elon is proud to be included among these.

The Value of Careful Estate Planning: An Example

By Frank Proffitt

Elon College graduate Archiable (Archie) E. Fleming (A.B.'40) loved Elon and left a sizable bequest in his will when he died in 1979. But after noting the gift, the striking thing that comes from a study of his will is how carefully it was drawn and how thoroughly he had developed his estate plan before it was written.

Archie and his wife, Mary Ruth, prudently made separate wills but jointly agreed on their objectives. Consequently their wills provisions were alike or similar in both wills, but each will was drafted to minimize taxes, legal fees, and administrative costs and to protect as much as possible against erosion of the estate.

Archie's will was premised on the actuarial expectation that Mary Ruth would outlive him. Therefore, his will was written so as to take maximum advantage of the marital deduction and to instruct his Executor that necessary costs and taxes should be paid out of the portion of his residuary estate which was not included in the marital share qualifying for the deduction. Also, the will provided for beneficiaries to receive full benefits, with taxes paid by the Executor from the estate.

After certain specific bequests were made to family members and friends, the will provided for the residuary estate to be conveyed, in trust, to a designated bank and trust company for purposes which were spelled out in sufficient detail. Since the couple had no children, the single most important objective was to ensure that Mary Ruth would have the income she needed after Archie's death. To accomplish this objective, the will provided that all of the net income from the trust should be paid to Mary Ruth, or applied for her benefit, during her lifetime. Also, the Trustee was authorized to apply as much of the principal as was necessary to meet her reasonable needs if, in his sole discretion, her income from all sources should become insufficient to take care of her.

Mary Ruth died in 1984 and, in accordance with a provision in the will, the trust was terminated, and the estate is in the process of being settled. The trust principal and the accumulated income will eventually be distributed to designated beneficiaries, in keeping with Archie's wishes, as set forth in the will. As indicated in the beginning, Elon College is one of these beneficiaries, and has already received one significant distribution from the estate.

Other distributions will follow as the settlement process progresses. This will eventually amount to one of the largest bequests Elon has ever received. Archie Fleming was a loyal alumnus who believed in the value of education, and he wanted to invest a large share of his estate in the futures of worthy young people by helping them to get a college education at Elon.

From Ohio to Elon: Support for the Fine Arts Center

The support of businesses and corporations—area, state and national—is crucial to Elon's success.

During the recent PRIDE II campaign, a total of 79 corporations made major donations, helping to push the college well over its $5.7 million goal to a total of $7.3 million.

The majority of these corporate gifts came from locally owned Alamance County corporations. Local corporations have long been among the college's most generous benefactors and have made much of the institution's progress possible. A significant number of PRIDE II corporation gifts, however, were made by firms operating locally but owned by a national corporation. In these cases, the local company, through its chief executive officer, received approval of the gift through the national headquarters.

Ametek-Lamb Electric Division of Graham, N.C., is one example. The divisional headquarters are in Kent, Ohio, and the plant in Graham has been manufacturing for the past seven years.

Ametek, a Fortune 500 company with sales last year of more than one-half billion dollars, has been listed on the New York Stock Exchange since 1930 and is a diversified manufacturer with 30 plants throughout the United States. The Graham Plant specializes in high-tech motors used in computers and business machines and produces blowers for high efficiency furnaces.

When PRIDE II volunteer C.A. McIver '36 called on Ametek's local plant manager, Donald T. Cowan, Cowan indicated that he was familiar with Elon and its programs and was personally interested in having his company support the college. A proposal was presented to the Ametek Foundation, Inc., and the result was a $20,000 commitment to the proposed Fine Arts Center at Elon.

The Ametek-Lamb Electric Division gift is one example of corporate support that has helped to make Elon a vital and progressive college.

What does a scholarship mean?

The following four stories are true. The individuals were students at Elon when they needed help.

Student A is married to a minister, is 36 years old and has four children. The family has a very modest income. The student previously attended a community college and performed excellently. When she transferred to Elon, she was awarded a $2,000 academic scholarship in conjunction with other aid. With this help, she was able to stay in school. At the end of the first semester she had a 3.7 grade average as a mathematics major.

Student B comes from a family of modest means, also. She was awarded a $2,200 academic scholarship and a $1,500 music scholarship. She also received an outside scholarship of $500 because of her potential. At the end of the fall semester she had a 3.6 grade point average. The scholarship aid has enabled her to stay in school without incurring loan debts.

Student C's father was a United Church of Christ minister. The father died before his son could enroll at Elon. The mother's income is derived from Social Security. The son received the discount Elon accords to children of UCC ministers plus a $1,500 academic scholarship and help from several Navy organizations. The father was a Navy chaplain. The son has been able to stay in school without taxing his mother's resources and without running up a large debt.

Student D, an orphan, transferred to Elon from a community college. He received a football scholarship and other aid to help him attend Elon. Despite his background of deprivation, he has become a successful student Scholarship funds enable him to continue as a student at Elon where he will receive preparation for a life and career he might never have known otherwise.

These four students all have a common goal—a college education. They also have a common problem—lack of money.

Today's students can still find work to help pay their way but usually it is impractical for them to try to hold down full time jobs. That means their money must come from elsewhere—perhaps a federal grant, but Congress is cutting into those sharpely. Meanwhile, the cost of a college education continues to rise.

ELON COLLEGE STUDY ABROAD

The Magazine of
ELON
Vol. 47, No.4 Oct., 1985

Elon Enrolls Largest and Brightest Student Body

Elon College has begun its 96th academic year by enrolling the largest and best-prepared freshman class in its history.

Official statistics indicate that 2929 students signed up for fall semester classes, the ninth consecutive increase in enrollment for the college. Academically, this year's freshman class is superior to all previous classes. Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores for freshmen are up an average of 50 points from two years ago, admissions officials report.

Joanne Soliday, dean of admissions, called the SAT increase "incredible."

"Normally it takes a college several years to achieve even a small increase," said Soliday.

Soliday attributed the success in part to increased interest in Elon. "The word is getting out what a great school this is," said Soliday. "The numer of applications we receive has increased 40 percent over the past two years. This allows us to be more selective."

Elon began raising admissions standards two years ago as a part of a series of goals for the college's Centennial Year, 1989. "We are not a university," said President Young in announcing the goals. "Neither is it our role to educate solely the academically elite. But we can and should aim for the top among the private institutions in the state with missions similar to ours."

The 1985-86 Elon students hail from 29 states, the District of Columbia and 12 foreign countries. Only 46 percent of the full-time students are from North Carolina, and college officials expressed both satisfaction and concern over that figure, which is down from 58 percent five years ago.

"The nature of the Elon student body is obviously changing," said Dr. Fred Young, "and the change has both positive and negative implications.

"The increasing number of out-of-state students means that Elon is less provincial and that opportunities here are more diverse."

"On the other hand, the decrease in North Carolina enrollment means that the college is moving away from its traditional enrollment base, which involves risk. An aggressive state tuition program is any one of the states from which we recruit heavily could greatly and immediately reduce our enrollment."

Young attributed the decrease chiefly to cost factors.

"Within North Carolina, Elon has difficulty competing with the cost of tuition at the state-supported universities," said Young. "Outside the state, however, students and parents consider Elon an excellent buy in education—good quality at a low cost."

With a current tuition of $3500, Elon is among the lowest-priced of all private colleges in its recruiting area. The North Carolina Legislative Tuition Grant of $950 reduces the cost to $2550 for all North Carolina residents attending Elon. Tuition at the state-supported schools averages slightly less than $1000.

As is traditional, twenty-five percent of Elon's 1985-86 students are from Virginia. Twelve percent are from the Maryland-New Jersey area.

Over one-half of the students chose to live on campus, creating a familiar housing crunch. At the beginning of the semester, 76 students had to be housed temporarily at a local motel. More than half of them have since been moved to campus residence halls, and space is expected to be available for the remainder by the end of the fall semester.

97th Freshman Class Gets to Know Elon

By Meredith Lee '86

Car doors slammed, trunk lids groaned open and parents braced themselves as young faces sported smiles of nervous anticipation—Orientation Week for students had begun.

On September 1, Carole Ann Barnett, a freshman from Pinebrook, New Jersey, was feeling the apprehensions of most students, she was looking forward to school, but did not want to leave her family.

"When we pulled the car around to unload it, my mother was telling me how worried she was about leaving me here so far away from home," said Barnett. "Then some cute soccer players came to move my stuff into my dorm and she said, 'I think you're going to like it here.' "

The orientation guide the freshmen received defined orientation as "finding out just where you are and why." During the three-day period the students not only learned where to find Mooney building, but also where to find the resources within themselves to make the most of their college careers.

The Sunday the students arrived was filled with moving, unpacking, meeting advisors and administrators and Opening Convocation. Monday brought the new freshmen more than most bargained for, a morning lecture on academics. After a day of smiles of welcome, Dr. John S. Sullivan's lecture, "Vision and Commitment," was quite a shock.

In the lecture, Dr. Sullivan told the students that they need to commit themselves to listening well and learning well. He asserted that during high school, the students cut class, came unprepared, did not participate in class, cheated or were aware of cheating, crammed for tests and ran away from their problems. Dr. Sullivan went on to tell them that college is the chance to break their bad habits of uncommited learning and running from problems.

"In my speech, I was knocking them down to prove my point," said Dr. Sullivan. "Then I picked them up, brushed them off and sent them on their way ." He said that he has had a positive response from the students about the lecture. "I want to give them the support they need to overcome the bad patterns they created," he said. "I want them to look at what they will do with college and what they're about."

"I thought the speech was really good, because 75 percent of it was true." said Russell Bull, a freshman from Parksley, Virginia. Bull noted that the speech had an important message for every freshman at Elon.

Tuesday's academic convocation, "Analysis of a Rock Video," was sponsored by the General Studies Program. It held a lighter message than the first academic convocation. The purpose of the program, according to Dr. Bill Rich, director of the General Studies Program, was to show how something that the freshmen were familiar with like a rock video could be approached from different perspectives.

The freshmen viewed a rock video, and then Dr. Rich and a panel of three faculty members led a discussion on the theme and meaning of the video. The panel gave three perspectives of the video, a sociological view, a feminist view, and a journalistic view, and then invited group discussion. "I want the freshmen to understand that general studies courses help them gain different perspectives of issues which lead to a better understanding," said Dr. Rich.

David Atkins, director of student activities, planned the 1985 orientation schedule. "I think the orientation program went well, from the students finding their dorms and moving in, to the two academic convocations."

Student Carole Barnett added, "Orientation was great. Everyone was friendly and helpful during a difficult time for me."

Twenty-two New Faculty Join Elon

Elon began the 1985-86 academic year with 22 new full-time faculty members. They included Dr. Ellen Barney Williams, granddaughter of the late professor John W. Barney, and a new chairman for the fine arts department, Dr. Paul Bravender. Dr. Bravender replaces Don Gibson, who resigned in the spring to become dean of music at Baylor University in Texas.

Degrees of the new faculty range from Oxford and The University of Edinburgh to Purdue, Michigan State, and the University of Chicago. Three received their undergraduate degrees at Elon.

"This new group is, as a whole, the largest, best-prepared and most experienced faculty hired in many years," said Dr. Chris White, vice president for academic and student affairs. I think Elon will be significantly enhanced by their knowledge and skills."

Letter to the Editor

My dear Friend:

I received the Elon Magazine yesterday with the article by Moses Crutchfield about me. I think he did a good job and I appreciate it very much. It's quite true that "I love Elon," and I'm always happy with its success.

Thanks for giving the idea and space for my being remembered. And the selection of the author was splendid. I remember Moses quite well as a student, and he was always a warm, lovable personality, which still exists.

With very much appreciation, and thanks to all concerned, I extend my best wishes.

"May the good Lord bless and keep you, cause his face to shine on you, and give you perfect peace."

God bless you.

Faculty Urges Divestment

The Elon College faculty has passed a resolution calling for the college to divest all its financial resources from corporations doing business with South Africa.

The resolution, sponsored by Dr. Bruce Waller and passed at the Oct. 4 faculty meeting, calls for the "complete divestment within two years, of all funds with those corporations with direct investments in South Africa..."

In addition, the resolution states that the South African system of apartheid is opposed to the college's commitment to "recognition of the intrinsic worth of all individuals."

The resolution also refers to previous recommendation from the national synod of the United Church of Christ asking all groups associated with the church to divest. This plea extends to all affiliated institutions such as Elon College.

The Investment Committee of the Board of Trustees asked the Elon staff in the spring to prepare a report on investments the college holds with companies who do business in South Africa. The Investment Committee's recommendation will be presented to the full board at its meeting on October 23.

In a recent interview with the Burlington Daily Times-News, President Fred Young stated that it was appropriate for the faculty and trustees to consider this issue.

"Precisely what kind of statement to make is the problem," Young said. "Do you totally disinvest; do you disinvest from companies that do business with companies doing business in South Africa, or do you do it according to the Sullivan Principles?"

The Sullivan Principles are a widely accepted set of criteria to which businesses should adhere or risk disinvestment.

Whatever the board decides at its October meeting, recent sanctions imposed by President Reagan and any future action taken by the U.S. government might make any action by the college "moot" according to Dr. Young.

College Mourns Brittain's Death

By Bob Moser '85

Elon College suffered a great loss this summer with the death of Dr. Mary Gates Brittain, an assistant professor of English who had been with the college since 1976. She had fought a year-long battle with cancer before her death at age 52.

Brittain was a dedicated and learned professor, but what stood out in her years at Elon were her many other activities. Involved in a great number of campus organizations, she devoted exceptional amounts of time and energy to these "interests." She served as advisor to the yearbook, Phi Psi Cli, for several years, was active in Omicron Delta Kappa, and was president of The Beta Omega chapter of Delta Kappa Gamma, an honor society for women educators. Her professional interests included the Modern Language Association, the Southeastern Renaissance Conference, the English Speaking Union, and the Order of the Eastern Star.

Even with all her commitments, Brittain saved much of her time for what she probably considered her main "interest," and certainly one of her greatest loves—the sisters of Alpha Sigma Alpha sorority. She served as advisor to the sorority for six years, and lovingly came to know the sisters as "her girls." As sorority president Sandra Perry said, "It was just like having a mom at school. She was more than just our advisor; she was our friend." The sorority has established a scholarship fund in memory of Dr. Brittain, and contributions can be sent to the sorority.

Dr. Brittain was born Mary Lou Gates in 1933 in the small town of Timpson, Texas. Married at 16 to Eugene Brittain, who died this year, she still managed to beome the first in her family to go to college, later earning her Ph.D. in English from the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

Dr. Mary Brittain's untimely death was mourned by faculty, students, and former students alike. As Chaplain Richard McBride said in his tribute to her, "Praise be to God that we have seen in Mary's manner of living that life can be both gentle and good, competent and inspiring."

Mary Cosby Speaks at Fall Worship Service

Mary Cosby, a founding member of the Church of the Saviour in Washington, D.C., was the guest speaker at the annual college/community fall worship service on October 1.

Mrs. Cosby's message was entitled "Borrowing God's Eyes." Her discussion centered around Christian attitudes which enable us to achieve a greater global understanding. The Reverend Richard McBride, Elon College chaplain, said that the message was in keeping with his goal for the year—"to enlarge our perspective and gain greater understanding of the problems of the world."

Mrs. Cosby founded the Church of the Saviour 40 years ago along with her husband, Gordon, and a friend, Elizabeth O'Connor. The mission of the church is to serve the homeless, infirm, elderly, immigrant mothers with babies, the unemployed and children in Washington, D.C.'s inner-city. In addition to the church work, Mrs. Cosby is a lecturer, teacher and retreat leader. She frequently speaks on issues such as the relationship between activism in the world and spirituality.

Future events at the college centering on this theme include a "Teach-In on South Africa" planned for the spring of 1986.

Central America Teach-In Raises Awareness

A teach-in on the people, issues and conflicts in Central America was held on the Elon campus September 16-18.

The three-day event was a joint effort by college chaplain Richard McBride and the General Studies program to increase public awareness of the peoples and conflicts in Central America.

Presentations began with the play A Peasant of El Salvador on Monday night. Other features included a chapel service conducted by Ann Calvin Rogers-Witte, pastor of Community United Church of Christ in Raleigh. She shared her experiences in Central America during the service and in an afternoon slide presentation.

• The highlight of the teach-in centered around the opposing viewpoints presented by two of the speakers, William Schofield and Reed Brody.

Schofield, representing the U.S. State Department Latin America Bureau, emphasized that the warfare between the Sandinista government of Nicaragua and the American-backed Contra rebels is not a confrontation the U.S. has created.

Schofield disputed the charge that the Reagan administration is interested only in a military solution to the strife. He claimed that for every U.S. dollar given Central Americans for military purposes, three dollars of aid go toward economic development.

Reed Brody, former assistant attorney general of New York state, led a four-month fact-finding mission to Nicaragua in 1984. His perception of American aid was quite different from Schofield's presentation.

Brody discovered during his stay in Nicaragua that the contras were not fighting the government or the army, but instead were making ruthless attacks on civilians. These same contras have been given $100 million in direct aid from the U.S. in four years, according to Brody.

Alumni

Sanford Named Alumni Director

Susie Bullard Sanford '79, whose Elon roots go back to the college's earliest years, has been appointed Director of Alumni and Parent Programs.

In her new position, Sanford will be in charge of planning activities designed to secure the interest and loyalty of alumni, parents and students. She will plan activities such as homecoming, alumni chapter meetings, alumni weekend, parents weekend, and class reunions.

Sanford is enthusiastic about her appointment. "My primary goal is to keep alumni and parents involved and interested in Elon," she noted.

"I am confident that Susie will make great contributions to the college because she has the qualities that will help her become an integral part of the development program at Elon," said Dr. Jo Watts Williams, vice president for development. "Susie already is familiar with Elon after working here as an accountant. Another of her strong points is her family's rich tradition of Elon graduates."

Sanford's grandfather, Dr. J.E. Rawls, class of 1896, and her grandmother, Emma Holland Rawls, class of 1902, began the Elon tradition that has lasted four generations. A total of 36 members of Sanford's family attended Elon. Four members were on the Elon College Board of Trustees: her grandfather; father, the late Dr. George M. Bullard of Mebane; great-aunt, Susie Holland; and uncle, Dr. J.E. Rawls, Jr. Her mother, Margaret Rawls Bullard, was a member of the class of 1946, and two brothers and a sister, Thomas Perry Bullard II, Dr. George Minson Bullard Jr., and Ann Rawls Bullard, are recent graduates.

After graduating from Elon with a degree in business administration, Sanford worked part time while earning her degree in accounting. She began working as an accountant for Elon in 1982. Her husband, Ronnie Sanford, is a sales representative for Redman Industries.

Snyder '45 Honored at Celebration

Dr. Walstein W. "Wally" Snyder '45 celebrated his 25th anniversary as executive director of Elon Home for Children on Thursday, August 1, at a surprise reception and dinner at Best Western Restaurant in Burlington. Dr. Snyder's wife, Nell, was also honored by the Board of Trustees for her service to the Home and support of her husband while he has served as executive director.

Over 220 people attended the event. Present and former board members and staff, Elon Home alumni, representatives from the many public and private organizations with which the Home works, and many friends and family paid tribute to Dr.Snyder.

Dr. Fred Young represented Elon College and made a brief address as part of the program.

At the conclusion of the program, Dr. Isabelle Powell, president-elect of the Elon Home for Children's Board of Directors, presented Dr. Snyder with a gold ring and Mrs. Snyder with a gold pendant, which were gifts from the Board, staff, and alumni.

Dr. Snyder grew up in Elkton, Virginia. He attended Elon College graduating in the class of 1945. In 1950 he received his B.D. from Duke University and in 1964 was awarded an honorary Doctor of Divinity degree by Elon College.

He came to Elon Home for Children in Elon College after serving as a minister for the United Church of Christ. During his tenure as executive director, the Home has established a sound financial base and has expanded to include two group homes, The Oaks in Burlington, and Turner Memorial Group in Suffolk, Virginia. In January 1985 Boys Town of North Carolina in Charlotte merged with Elon Home for Children. Dr. Snyder was instrumental in effecting the merger. Under Dr. Snyder's leadership, the Home has attained national recognition.

Two Alumni Chapters Meet

Suffolk/Tidewater Virginia Chapter

The Suffolk/Tidewater Virginia Chapter sponsored a pool party on Saturday, August 3, at the Suffolk Swimming Pool. Although unusually cool weather prevented participants from swimming, more than 50 area alumni enjoyed socializing with their college friends. Arrangments for the party were made by Betty Jean '76 and Terry '71 Crigger, and Mopsi '75 and Henry '71 Pittman. Local alumni who assisted in promoting the event were Jane '78 and Rusty '78 Smith, Perry-Lou '77 and Mickey '77 Leggett, Kay and Donnie '69 Goldberg, Marcia '80 and Steve '82 Humphrey, Dickie Whitmore '82, Tina and Blair '83 Thompson, Wanda '77 and Les '77 Hall, Debbie '77 and Jay '78 Butler, Wellington Saecker '41, Cheryl '78 and Barry '79 Oliver, and Trisha '74 and Steve '73 Doucette. The college was represented by John Bangley '84, Director of Athletic Fund Raising. (Chapter President: Betty Jean Crigger 804/934-0250)

Greater Charlotte Chapter

On Wednesday, September 11, the Greater Charlotte Chapter hosted a dinner party at the Charlotte Athletic Club. About 30 guests enjoyed cocktails and a delicious steak dinner. Speaker Mackey Carden, Elon's head football coach, discussed the prospects for the 1985 Fighting Christians. Stan '78 and Martha '79 Butler organized the event. Those who helped to spread the word were Patricia Hook '47 and Gene Neal, Lib and Bob '44 Johnston, Olivia and Woody '35 Wilson, Jeanne Hook '45 and "Ace" '48 Harrell, and John Nichols '65. The college was represented by Susie Bullard Sanford '79, Director of Alumni & Parent Programs, John Bangley '84, Director of Athletic Fund Raising, and Dr. Jerry Tolley, Director of Corporate and Annual Resources. Alumni

Walker Heads Annual Fund

Zachary T. Walker III, president of Oakhurst Textiles in Greensboro has been selected chairman of Elon College's 1985-86 Annual Fund Campaign.

Walker's selection was announced by Dr. Jerry Tolley, director of annual and corporate giving. "Zac" Walker has had a strong interest in the college since his graduation in 1960," noted Tolley. Currently Walker serves as president of the executive committee of the Alumni Association and as a member of the Presidential Board of Advisers.

Walker also has an impressive family history with Elon. His uncle was "Peahead" Walker, coach and athletic director until 1937. Walker's father, Zachary T. Walker, Jr., a 1930 graduate, was the quarterback during his senior year and played on "Peahead's" Walker's team. Both men have been inducted into the Elon Sports Hall of Fame.

"Zac" Walker III '60

In a letter to Alumni, Walker proudly announced that Elon now ranks as number one in alumni participation among all co-ed college and universities in North Carolina. In light of this record, his challenge to fellow alumni is "to lead Elon's alumni giving to an all time high."

The 1985-86 campaign goal is $350,000. In order to meet this impressive goal, Walker urges every donor who has ever made a donation in the past to make a contribution this year. In making inquiries about past donations, Walker discovered that last year 15 classes had over 50% participation; 45 classes had over 40% participation. Walker has set the 50% participation mark as his goal for all classes for 1985-86.

In addition, special attention will be paid to three classes, randomly selected, in a pilot project to challenge the giving record of the class of 1937. That class can boast a remarkable 72% participation in the Annual Fund drive.

The classes challenged this year are: 1974, Nathanial W. Harrison, Jr., president; 1964, Dr. K. Wayne Pruitt, president; and 1957, Donald B. Johnson, president.

Walker hopes that these special efforts to increase alumni giving will move Elon close to its real dream: to be number one among all colleges and universities in the Southeast in alumni participation.

History Buff Puts a Shine on Old Church

by Ronald H. Hart, Jr.

A 19-year-old history major at Elon College is leading an effort to restore one of the few remaining antebellum churches in the Winston-Salem area.

Michael Perdue, now a college junior, began working in 1981 to restore the Wentworth United Methodist Church to its original condition. The church was dedicated in 1859.

It is an area of North Carolina peppered with large tobacco fields on gently rolling hills. Life is slow-paced in Wentworth, with a strong sense of community.

Since most parishioners are older, Perdue is finding it necessary to look outside the community for support for his project.

Although it is challenging, it is work that he enjoys.

"I've been interested in history all my life, especially church history," he said. "I have roots (in the community) going back to 1836 and a strong personal interest in this church."

Perdue was the most likely candidate to organize the renovation, according to the other members of the small congregation. So, they gave him the responsibility of doing the project.

When the building was erected, slavery was still practiced and social interaction between the sexes was strictly regulated. These social conventions influenced the construction of the building.

Originally, the slaves had to sit in the balcony, which could only be reached from an exterior door on the side of the church. That way they would never enter the sanctuary.

A wooden partition extended from the back wall of the church all the way to the front pew. Not only did men and women have to sit on separate sides of the sanctuary, they had to enter through separate doors.

To learn about the history of the church, Perdue interviewed the older members and searched records in Charlotte and at Duke University, as well as the church's own records.

Wooten's Runback: A Legend at Elon

"Once in a lifetime!" A quarter of a century after it happened those four words were George Wooten's immediate reaction to the mention of a touchdown he scored for Elon College in a 13-12 victory against Catawba in 1960. But it was more than just a touchdown.

Here was the scene: Catawba led Elon 12-7, with eight seconds to play in the game and had the ball at Elon's seven-yard line. It was fourth down, and the options for Catawba were either to run a play and kill all but the last couple of seconds or kick a field goal for a sure victory.

Catawba called timeout to talk over the situation and decided to get more points with a field goal.

At that point, Catawba's world ended, and the world of George Wooten, Elon and thousands of students and alumni who had gathered for Homecoming Day exploded in a starburst of ecstacy.

Catawba's center did not make a good snap, the holder made an even worse placement and the kick sailed off to the right, nowhere near the goal posts, and didn't even have enough steam to go over the end line.

"I was lined up on the left side of the end zone, just in case—just in case by some sliver of a chance the ball might be sliced to my side. We had another man stationed on the other side of the end zone for the same reason," says Wooten.

The fates continued to conspire against Catawba—and for Elon. Forgeting that a short field goal could be run out of the end zone just like a punt, the Catawba players never even covered the ball.

"I caught it about two yards from the back line," Wooten remembers, "and as I looked upfield, I couldn't believe that I had an alley about 15 yards wide. I just took off, and no one even touched me until I got to the end zone, and one of my teammates darn near killed me."

"When we looked at the films on Monday, the Catawba players were shown watching me like I was some kind of idiot, running so hard past them," he adds. "None of them even moved to get at me."

Of course, Catawba later claimed that an official blew a whistle and they thought the play was dead, hence they didn't give chase. Not so, says Wooten.

"There was no whistle because if they had heard one, then I would have heard one, and I wouldn't have run like 108 yards for nothing," he says. "Heck, at that point all of us felt the game was over, and all Catawba had to do was to run out the clock. When we saw them line up for the field goal, we didn't like it. We felt they were trying to rub our noses in it."

The following year when the two teams played at Catawba, and Catawba attempted another field goal, Wooten lined up in the end zone again.

"This time, though, they sent a couple of guys out to cover the area as soon as the ball was kicked," he says with a laugh.

The feat is a legend at Elon, passed down each year, and everyone knows all of the details. There are also about a half million people, among the several thousand who actually were there, who claim to have witnessed that miracle.

"My son's football coach has told his team about it as a good example of never giving up, never believing any game is over until the final gun," says Wooten, who works for the Navy as a personnel specialist and now lives in Virginia Beach. "And he's correct. I should know."

For two Elon alums the restaurant business means success

à La Carte

by Deborah H. Crotts

The restaurant business is highly competitive. It demands not only substantial investment of money, time and energy, but also a flair for satisfying the whims of an all-too-fickle public, always on the lookout for the new and unusual. Two Elon College alumni, however, are carving quite a niche for themselves in this exacting field. Donald Keith Hall '72 and William Rex Harrison '66 are both successful and innovative restaurateurs.

Keith Hall's involvement with the restaurant business began with a job as a dishwasher for Le Chateau in Burlington. He held this job while he attended Elon College, juggling work and studies to make room for football practice and his wife and young daughter. From a position as dishwasher, he rapidly progressed to management trainee in 1972, then to store manager in that same year, area manager in 1973, regional manager in 1974, vice president of operations in 1975, and finally, to senior vice president in 1977. At that point he was the second in command in the Le Chateau organization and was not yet 30 years old!

Le Chateau had also grown from a single restaurant in Burlington, NC., to a chain of 26 restaurants which were sold to the food company Green Giant in 1977 and then to Pillsbury less than a year later. Keith stayed with Le Chateau as their senior vice president and ran the franchise for Pillsbury for two years, building the chain from 26 to 52 restaurants. Pillsbury, which also owned Steak and Ale, decided to convert Le Chateaus to Steak and Ale or sell them individually. Keith helped oversee the sale of the restaurants and earned enough money to finance his own venture: T.K. Tripps.

T.K. Tripps was Keith's first brainchild. With the help of Thomas D. Mincher, one of the former owners of Le Chateau, Keith has developed his idea from the original restaurant in Greensboro to a chain of seven restaurants in North Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama. The T.K. Tripps restaurants (T. from Thomas Mincher, K. from Keith Hall and Tripps from an ad agency's list of suggestion) exhibit a sophisticated, but relaxed atmosphere with a combination restaurant and lounge. Catering to the affluent and upwardly mobile, T.K. Tripps offers a place to meet people, socialize, and enjoy a casual dinner.

Current annual sales of the T.K. Tripps restaurants exceed nine million dollars, an obvious sign of the public's appreciation.

In addition to the T.K. Tripps, Keith and Mincher have started the Rock-Ola Cafe. They researched this idea by visiting in Texas, Nevada, and on the west coast to study the trends in restaurants. The prototype for what they hope to develop into another rapidly expanding chain is located at the corner of West Market Street and Muirs Chapel Road in Greensboro, N.C. The menu is hamburgers, hot dogs, salads, sandwiches, and fries but it is definitely not a fast-food restaurant. The atmosphere is casual, 1950s style. Rock-Ola is family oriented, offering a fun atmosphere and large quantities of good food for a modest price. It has met with Greensboro's enthusiastic approval. The proud owners note that Rock-Ola is doing 20 to 25 percent more business than they had budgeted.

Plans are afoot to expand both of these operations. Raleigh, Charlotte, Winston-Salem, Atlanta, Hampton (Virginia), and Orlando are under consideration as possible sites for Rock-Ola Cafes and new T.K. Tripps. Keith hopes that they will have 50 to 52 restaurants in operation by the 1990's. He feels firmly that the secret to success is good management and inspires his managers by offering monthly bonuses based on the individual restaurant's profitability. In addition, they do careful research before they open a restaurant and are reasonably certain once it is opened it should make a profit.

Keith still keeps time for his family and football, just as he did in college days. He speaks with obvious pride of his daughter, a high school junior and cheerleader, and his son, an eighth grader who loves sports. He coaches football at Western Guilford High School, is on the Board of Directors for Youth Programs for Greensboro, has sponsored a football camp for the underprivileged, and has participated in the alumni football games at Elon College.

Rex Harrison shares Keith Hall's commitment to family and football. The former Los Angeles Rams and Norfolk Neptunes football player considers his three children his crowning achievement. Football has taken a back seat in his current lifestyle although he says ex-football players from the Rams, the Redskins, and the Philadelphia Eagles have come to visit his establishment: the night club September's in Virginia Beach.

Like Keith Hall, Rex has had to work for what he has; it was not handed to him on a silver platter, so to speak. His father died when he was six leaving his mother with the job of supporting herself and her son with a bookkeeping job at a feed company which paid forty dollars a week. Rex hoped to earn a football scholarship to a major university.

His coach recommended that he apply to Elon. Rex worked the summer before college at a moving and storage company and did weight-lifting. He brought his weight up 45 pounds and was able to earn a place on the Elon College football team when he arrived in the fall. He planned to be a doctor, but after his marriage in his sophomore year, he realized that the cost of medical school would probably be prohibitive and changed his major to history with a minor in physics and math.

After leaving Elon, he was the 72nd player chosen in the sixth draft of the NFL and was offered a contract with the Los Angeles Rams. Rex signed with them, becoming the first Elon player to be drafted by the NFL. He sustained an ankle injury and coach George Allen let him go after a year. He returned to Norfolk and played for the Norfolk Neptunes in the Continental League for three years. Following that, he went with Xerox Corporation , starting as a sales representative in Norfolk and working his way up to branch manager for Hampton Roads.

The dream for a restaurant and club like September's was born during his football career when he visited the night spots of Los Angeles with a group of football players. It has blossomed into September's, a sophisticated place, decorated in the Art Deco opulence of the 1920s with marble, opal, walnut, and brass. It caters to the established affluent and attracts an impressive guest list, including Mark Moseley of the Redskins and Gavin McLeod of the televison show Loveboat. The club has a video screen behind the bar which broadcasts MTV at an unobtrusive level. Harrision is branching out into live entertainment and various programs such as fashion shows, dance classes, and aerobics classes to provide interest and excitement.

The Rose Room, the restaurant half of September's, boasts a computerized ordering system which allows the waiter or waitress to key the order from the dining room and gives the restaurant a more relaxed, in-control atmosphere. The color scheme for The Rose Room naturally is rose, accented by teal and black. Each table is covered with a pink linen tablecloth and graced with a single rose and a candle. The chef, who was previously the chef for Jacques Cousteau's Calypso, has prepared a healthy and tantalizing menu offering regional nouvelle cuisine or, as Rex Harrison explains it, "regional dishes in French sauces."

Rex Harrison '66

Harrison is proud of his endeavor and justifiably so, but at present he is satisfied with its uniqueness. He has been approached by people who are interested in expanding on his idea or making it the first of many, but unlike Keith Hall, Rex has no wish to go beyond his single establishment. He thinks he will work at this for five or ten years and then perhaps retire.

Both Keith Hall and Rex Harrison have created exciting places for eating and entertainment and both are doing exceedingly well in their field. These two Elon alumni have achieved success with a unique flair.

Conversation with a Philosopher

In announcing that Dr. John Greenfelder Sullivan is the first recipient of the new Maude Sharpe Powell Professorship, President Fred Young said, "The primary factor in his selection was his effectiveness as a teacher. Willingly assuming the role of mentor, counselor and friend to his students, he exemplifies the ideal for a liberal arts institution."

In my conversation with this professor of philosophy, he spoke first about the classroom. "I think teaching is one of the dramatic arts," he said. "I feel that I must enliven the subject matter and make it applicable to the students' lives. Teaching is like the work of an actor who brings a role to life, no matter how many times he plays it. He must reanimate the old, must do the play anew.

"Philosophy starts at zero point," ... continued. "I know what I will do, but I face it anew each course, each day. Probably it won't be the same as last time because students always make a difference. And I am learning, making shifts in my own emphases and ideas. There is a job of sorting out the flowers and the garbage.

"Am I a better teacher as I grow older?" Sullivan repeated my question. "Do I make a greater impact on my students now than when I started? I am available to them now in terms of myself, of the things I love. I have more connection points now. And I think I give my students far more than I was given at their age. I give them quality material when I'm at my best. I also want to make the student less provincial and to deepen his or her responses. It is frustrating to see the needs and to know that you get the students for such a little while. One is always coping with failure—the limitations of self and students against the ideal."

Serving for a decade (1972-82) as chairman of the Department of Philosophy, which offers a rich selection of upper level courses in addition to the introductory, Sullivan has insisted on keeping the required hours for the major low—27 semester hours of "very solid courses." The purpose is to encourage either a double major or a philosophy major and another concentration. He believes that the student at undergraduate level should have a good background in the liberal arts. Sullivan worked with a project team in the summer of 1981 which formulated the draft report for a revision of the general education requirements. Elon College has since adopted a curriculum requirement of liberal arts courses throughout the student's four years.

In the relatively small Department of Philosophy, enrollment runs about 500 students a year. Here the courses, divided into sequences, include the introductory: Introduction, Logic and Ethics; the historical sequence: Greek and Medieval Philosophy, 20th Century, American, and Modern; and the topical group of six: Philosophy of Law, of Religion, of Science, Philosophy and Society, Eastern Philosophy, and Ages and Stages of Life.

Dr. Bruce Waller, a colleague in the department, says of Dr. Sullivan, "John is open in his approach to philosophical issues and very generous in discussion. We by no means agree on every question we discuss, but John is always fair. The temptation in disagreement is the strawman fallacy: one is tempted to cast the opposing position in the weakest possible form. That is the opposite of John's approach. He is always eager to frame positions and arguments in their strongest forms, whether they are his own views or those with which he disagrees.

"Getting clearer on an issue or closer to the truth is much more important to John than winning an argument or upholding his original position.

"John can, however, be formidable in argument. His wide-ranging knowledge and analytic tenacity and thoroughness lead him to weak points in arguments and positions, and his own views are carefully crafted and stoutly defended.

"In our teaching we may be something like Jack Sprat and his wife, licking the platter of philosophical pedagogy clean because our tastes are in such direct contrast. But that would not be quite true. John teaches several areas—ancient, medieval, Eastern, philosophy of religion—which I am not qualified to teach, but I can't think of any area that I teach which he could not teach. While we do have complementary interests, we have some in common—philosophy of psychology, moral psychology, and contemporary ethics."

Waller classifies himself as a logical positivist, the point of view of the Vienna Circle, also known as logical empiricism which sifts out the metaphysical and relies on the logic of science.

"Bruce and I blend in many things and disagree in some," Sullivan says. "I tend more toward religion, ethics, and psychology. My definition of religion is that it is a quest to reunite what has been separated. The core of religion is the mystic tradition, the sense of an ultimate source and of the kinship of all things."

He is pleased that academic philosophers are now talking about Eastern philosophy, a subject taught more frequently in departments of religion. Some Americans are learning more about the East and are practicing meditation and contemplation. This interest has increased greatly in the last 20 years.

"It has also become acceptable to be interested in the applied areas of philosophy," Sullivan says. "Of late, I have been involved in questions of ethics and professional responsibility, especially in the health care professions. For example, I gave the keynote presentation, 'The Nurse in the Middle,' for the North Carolina Nurses Association in Greensboro. And I have spoken on similar topics to state counselors and social service workers in district and state meetings.

"Until recently, the stress has been on the ethics of duty, the language of rules and rights," Sullivan explains. "In the last decade, interest has grown in the ethics of virtues—the language of responsibility, i.e., the appropriate response. When we are talking about the question of what we ought to do, we tend to move to the extreme cases, such as allocation of scarce resources or of the fate of a defective newborn child.

"I am less interested in the 'lifeboat' cases and more in the way value-laden issues arise every day," Sullivan says . "For example, in speaking with nurses on issues under the rubric of ethics, I found that what emerged many times was not 'What is to be done?' but 'How do we respond?' when clearly something is wrong. It could be insufficient options being given to the patient, or the drug dependence of a physician. Wishing to be neither a martyr nor a minimalist, the nurse is caught in the middle. If she speaks up, she may lose a job she desperately needs; if she doesn't she feels frustrated and guilty. Such a situation demands not just ethical solving, but organizational, diplomatic solving of human relations problems."

I asked John Sullivan about his association with the Traditional Acupuncture Institute in Columbia, Maryland, a connection many people may think a long way from an Elon College professorship.

"In the last five years," Sullivan said, "I have been increasingly

associated with this institute as visiting lecturer, as consultant, and from 1984 as a member of their board of directors. I went up there first as a visiting lecturer on medical ethics, invited by Bob Duggan and Dianne Connelly, whom I have known for years. They had become interested in such an institute near Oxford, England, and had stayed there to study. Over the last decade they have developed their own endeavor, their own identity, in Maryland. They have a faculty of 20 and about 18 visiting lecturers, some from Johns Hopkins and from neighboring colleges, and people in practice.

"I found here a direct application of Eastern philosophy. It made me rethink all my ideas," Sullivan continued. "In the context of doing consulting work with them, I took the beginning portion of their intensive 27-month training program. After my beginning course, I know that anyone who thinks M.Ds can go for a weekend course and learn acupuncture is completely ignorant of this ancient Eastern practice. It speaks to levels of body, mind, and spirit. It is an alternative mode of preventive medicine. In fact, in ancient China, physicians were paid only if the patient stayed healthy. Just as eastern philosophy involves the whole person, so does this form of wholistic health. Sir William Osler, the Canadian physician and writer who came to Johns Hopkins, said, 'Don't tell me about the symptoms of the patient, but tell me about the patient who has these symptoms.'"

Sullivan believes that medical profession burn-out, not to mention the problems of litigation, calls for some alternatives in health care with emphasis upon preventive medicine. He thinks that the application of Eastern philosophy, which integrates body, mind and spirit, may be one answer.

In announcing the new Powell professorship, President Young also said, "Dr. Sullivan's credentials are impeccable" Sullivan brings to this professorship the academic training and research which culminated in two doctorates: the J.C.D. in Canon Law from Lateran University, Rome, Italy, and the Ph.D. in philosophy from the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

Preparing at first for the Roman Catholic priesthood, Sullivan won a Baselin Fellowship for his junior and senior years at Catholic University in Washington, D.C., for the B.A. and the M.A. in Philosophy. He continued at Catholic University for the four years required in theology, and he added a second major in mathematics. In 1963 he was ordained a Roman Catholic priest.

"That year I had the chance to go to Rome," Sullivan recalled. "Pope John had died, Paul was the new Pope, and the Vatican Council was meeting. I left Washington feeling very cosmopolitan and liberal and arrived in Rome in August when the Council was in full tilt. To my amazement, I found unofficial Rome light years ahead of us. Everything was being rethought. It was a mind shock, but very exciting! I soon realized it would not be effective to write on church law, for it was then in a state of flux. I decided to concentrate on the broader issue of interpretation of law."

Sullivan completed his studies and his thesis, "The Relevance of Three Anglo-American Jurists for a Theory of Interpretation of Canon Law," privately printed in Rome in 1966. The three jurists were H.L.A. Hart, Roscoe Pound, and Benjamin Cardozo. He returned to Rhode Island to become executive assistant to the Bishop of Providence and assistant chancellor for the Rhode Island Diocese.

As time passed, Sullivan felt that in good conscience he could not function as a Catholic priest, for several hoped-for changes did not emerge from the Vatican Council. He asked for, and received, ecclesiastical permission to leave the active ministry in 1968.

Now he added to his education by taking work in group leadership at the National Training Laboratories Institute of Applied Behavioral Science in Holderness, N.H., work at the Anthos Institute, New York, and at the Princeton Gestalt Center, Princeton, N.J. Increasing his experience in management and in communications, Sullivan took a job as administrative assistant to the president and general manager of Gallagher Communications, Inc., New York City.

By 1970 Sullivan was ready to return to his first love, philosophy, and on January 17 to marry Linda L. Votta, whom he had met in New York City. That fall he joined the faculty of Elon College as assistant professor of philosophy and director of a new current issues program which he designed for small group explorations of social topics.

In 1972 Sullivan was named chairman of his department, replacing Dr. Ferris Reynolds, "a hard place to fill." Respected by his colleagues for the content and manner of his suggestions and ideas, he was elected chairman of the Academic Council. For 10 years he served on the Curriculum Committee. In 1980 he was promoted to full professor and in May was given the Daniels-Danieley Award for Excellence in Teaching.

"I become interested in the work of the North Carolina Humanities Committee and began work with them as resource humanist in 1974. I have continued to work with them to the present," Sullivan said. His work has entailed speaking and consulting in numerous projects sponsored throughout North Carolina by the NCHC. This interest has taken him out of state to serve on panels, to deliver papers and to participate in workshops.

Sullivan served as chief consultant and played a large part in a project of the National Endowment for the Humanities which culminated in the adult education project entitled "The Measure of Man: Humane Values in Western Civilization." This public lecture series covered six historical periods with published tools for community-wide programs. Later in this project the NEH saw the need for an adult seminar for which reading materials had to be developed. Sullivan worked on the Medieval, the 18th Century, and the 20th Century segments.

"This is in the field of adult education which I enjoy very much", Sullivan said. "The public is always invited to these programs which bring scholars and community together. The Cumberland County Library in Fayetteville, for example , has had great success with 'The Measure of Man' series. So have Durham, Charlotte, and others.

"Another project I enjoyed was a film-lecture series in five parts entitled 'Aspects of Love' which I gave at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro," said Sullivan. "In this series I was examining human relationships: parent-child, man-woman, master-disciple, colleagues at work. There are many kinds of human relations.

"Eventually I would like to write a book on certain aspects of morality. I wrote my Ph.D thesis at UNC on 'Kohlberg's Progress Toward Understanding the Moral Life,' and I had planned a book based on this topic. Now my interests focus more on the ethics of the virtues, the relation of ethics and religion and questions concerning alternative modes of healing.

I asked Sullivan what, if anything, he would like to add to his full life at Elon College.

"I remain very interested in the general education—liberal arts—program at Elon and also in adult continuing education. If I could now bring to this college some aspect of philosophical thinking and its application, I would like it to be an emphasis upon the feminine, on birthing and nourishing, in contrast to what we have been doing in America for years. We have made the human being an abstraction in the pursuit of material success—things and money. Both nationally and internationally, we have too often stressed aggression, dominance, and force. Of course, we have made great progress in many fields, but a 'macho' stance toward other peoples can now bring humanity to extinction. We need to recover non-aggressive, non-arrogant ways of settling conflicts.

"We should reinstate a balance of the masculine and the feminine, not either-or, but a balance for wholeness," Sullivan continued. "We need to recover a less individualistic, more communal vision.

"In this endeavor, Eastern philosophy can play a part, not because it is Eastern, but because it articulates aspects of the human that have been forgotten.

"Institutions, such as colleges, can apply the nourishing aspects of the feminine in teaching, in planning, and in a vision of the universality and wholeness of life."

Mary Ellen Priestley, retired professor of English and journalism, has known John Sullivan since he came to Elon College.

Elon Football Ranked No. 1

By Alan Wooten '86

Following Elon's big 33-27 win over Lenoir-Rhyne College Bears on Homecoming Weekend, the Fightin' Christians garnered the number one ranking in the NAIA for the first time in nearly two years. With victories over Guilford and 1984 National Champion Carson-Newman, in addition to their victory over Lenoir-Rhyne, Elon is also sitting atop the SAC-8 standings.

Leading the Fightin' Christians on offense thus far is tailback Jonas Davis of Henderson, N.C., with 330 yards on 70 carries and six touchdowns. At quarterback, Waynesboro, Va., native Mike Brodowicz has completed 25 of 48 attempts for 289 yards and three touchdowns. His leading receiver, Eden, N.C., native Stanley Hairston, boasts 12 catches for 169 yards and two touchdowns. In the offensive line, 6-1, 250-pound Alphonso Morrison, of Hamlet, N.C., has led Elon's big front.

Defensively, the Fightin' Christians have been led by linebacker Russell Evans of Cheraw, S.C., with 27 solo tackles and 15 assisted tackles. His cohort at linebacker, Jack Arnold of Albany, N.Y., has 21 solos, 11 assists and one quarterback sack. The defensive line has been led by noseguard Grady Williams, of Weldon, N.C., with 16 solo tackles, four assists and two quarterback sacks, while the secondary has been led by Tim and Mike Ferrell of Danville, Va.

Elon's head coach Macky Carden has been extremely pleased with the team's performance thus far in 1985 and is optimistic that Elon will continue its march towards both the SAC-8 and NAIA titles.

SOCCER

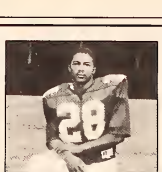
The Elon College soccer team also has gotten off to a fine start in 1985 with a 7-1-1 record through nine games. The Fightin' Christians, under Coach Steve Ballard, are led by three-time All-American Joe Nepay of Monrovia, Liberia, with five goals and six assists. Freshman Mike Wessels of Jacksonville, N.C., has chipped in seven goals and four assists. Another freshman, Glenn Gess of Somerdale, N.J., has six goals and four assists. Defensively, Elon is led by senior sweeper back Andy Schaefer of Altamonte Springs, Fla., and left back Ron Jandoli of Bricktown, N.J. The Fightin' Christians, currently ranked seventh in the NAIA in the Southern Division poll, hope to capture the conference title again and garner the first ever District 26 title.

WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL

Under new coach Byrd Britt, Elon's volleyball team has struggled through a difficult season. The team currently has a 6-10 mark going into the second half of the 1985 season.

GOLF

Elon College's golf team under head coach Bill Morningstar currently holds a first place and second place finish in their fall, 1985 season. Elon captured the Washington and Lee Invitational Tournament with Chris Dockrill, a senior from Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, garnering medalist honors. Elon finished runner-up in the James Madison Invitational Tournament, while Elon's Jimmy Merriman, a senior from Fieldale, Va., finished second in the individual race. With a rebuilt team, Coach Morningstar is extremely pleased with the showing of the 1985-86 linksters.



Tailback Jonas Davis leads the Fightin' Christian offense.

Don't Miss a Play

The Elon football games are being carried live over radio station WWMO located in Reidsville, N.C., as well as Elon's campus station, WSOE. WWMO is a 100,000-watt station, 24 hours a day, located at 107-FM on your dial. Doing the play-by-play for the Fightin' Christians are Bob Anderson and Wes Durham. Durham is the son of UNC-Chapel Hill commentator Woody Durham.

Tolley Edits Book of Football Drills

Dr. Jerry Tolley, director of annual and corporate giving at Elon and former head football coach, has recently compiled and published a book of football drills called The American Football Coaches Guidebook to Championship Football Drills .

The book contains over 800 drills and drill variations which Tolley personally solicited from 260 football coaches across the nation. The contributing coaches line up like a Who's Who of college football coaches: Barry Switzer, Joe Paterno, Gerry Faust, Pat Dye, Frank Akers, Danny Ford, Bo Schembechler, Vince Dooley, and Dick Crum, to mention a few.

The book was first published in February 1985 and is already in its second printing.

The genesis of the book, according to Tolley, goes back to the days soon after he resigned from Elon's head coach position after back-to-back NAIA national championships. Prentice-Hall Publishing Company approached him about writing a how-to book on football while his name was well known.

After contract discussions with Prentice-Hall, Tolley decided that, given the ready-made market for the book, he could publish it himself more profitably. So publish it he did, only to find that coaches everywhere were waiting for such a book.

Lou Holtz, former N.C. State coach now at Minnesota, probably summed up the football community's reaction best:

"The AFCA has presented the football profession with a volume I consider to be a coach's dream...I cannot imagine a coach not wanting it for his professional library."

NOMINATIONS FOR 1986 ALUMNI AWARDS

YOUNG ALUMNUS OF THE YEAR
The award is presented to a maximum of two alumni who have been graduated for a period not to exceed fifteen years and have distinguished themselves in their professions and communities. (Alumni who graduated 1971 or later are eligible in 1986.)

DISTINGUISHED ALUMNUS AWARD
The award is presented to a maximum of two alumni who have distinguished themselves in their professions or communities and thereby brought honor to their Alma Mater.

CITIZEN'S SERVICE AWARD
The award is presented to a maximum of two individuals (normally not alumni) who have been instrumental in the advancement of the College through the giving of their time and energy.

SERVICE AWARD
The award is presented to one organization that has been instrumental in the advancement of the college through the giving of time and energy.

Alumni who have gained prominence in business, education, the ministry, science, social service, the arts, law or politics might be nominated, but qualified nominees from other fields are also eligible for consideration. To make a nomination, complete this form and return it to:

Teach-In

"The Central American Teach-In gave us a chance to raise our political awareness and sensitivity," said Chaplain McBride. "We are not as politically or religiously aware as we should be about the world around us."

To continue this awareness of our place in the world community, McBride is planning another teach-in during the spring of 1986. The focus for that event will be South Africa.

Alum Puts Elon on National Map

Alcoa Aluminum recently presented the Arthur Vining Davis Award to Elon College Trustee G. Thomas Holmes '39 and 34 of his colleagues for "outstanding group achievement in Alcoa technology." This was only the second time in Alcoa's history that the award has been given.

To publicly honor these men, Alcoa published a full-page announcement in The Wall St. Journal. It stated: "In their search for excellence, these Alcoans have made a better world for all of us."

The state-of-the-art technology Holmes and the group developed is called "the Alcoa 398 Process." It is a closed-loop system for cleaning and protecting the air and environment at smelting locations.

The Alcoa announcement stated that "the environmental success of this system has accelerated the use of Alcoa smelting technology by other aluminum producers and has established Alcoa as a technological and environmental leader worldwide."

Holmes has been part of the Elon world since his graduation in 1939. He has served as a member of the Board of Trustees since 1977.

Holmes wrote that he and his wife Gladys '41, "had a very enjoyable return visit and party to receive this award from Alcoa's directors and officers." Holmes is now retired, lives in Pinehurst and enjoys spending time on the golf course and at the beach.

OCTOBER 1985

The Magazine of
ELON
Vol. 48, No. 1 March 1986

Hail to the Chiefs . . .

Three of the five most recent presidents of the United States have visited Elon College in the last 25 years, although none of the visits occured during their terms in office.

Gerald R. Ford's February 25th visit was his second to Elon. He was the House Minority Leader in the United Stated Congress when he first visited in 1966. His speech, entitled "Changing Political Concepts," dealt with the increasing power of the federal branch of goverment over the legislative branch. Ford attacked increasing executive power and Supreme Court decisions involving reapportionment, the issue at the time. He declared that the Congress was fast losing its partnership status because of the difference in manpower available to the two branches. During the 60s, the executive branch controlled more than five and a half million federal employees, while the legislative branch controlled only 9,000. It seems that his remarks were prophetic.

By all accounts Ford impressed his listeners greatly, and a spirited discussion session with students followed. Ford became the head of federal government in 1974 upon the resignation of President Richard M. Nixon.

Lyndon B. Johnson created quite a stir in 1962 when he arrived on the Elon grounds in a helicopter and spent most of the Elon College Founders Day on campus. President. J. Earl Danieley conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws upon Johnson, who later spoke to a crowd that was the largest ever to assemble at Elon up to that time. The speech he delivered to the rapt ears of faculty, students and friends was primarily on the subject of foreign affairs. Within a year, the Elon Founders Day guest would become president of the nation.

Jimmy Carter was on the Elon campus early in his campaign for the 1976 Democratic nomination for president. Carter, however, did not come as a guest of the college. He delivered a speech to a small crowd at the annual Alamance County Democratic Party fund-raising dinner on the second floor of the McEwen Dining Hall. The Carter address did not attract a great deal of attention, as few people imagined that the little-known former governor of Georgia would become the nation's 39th president little more than a year later.

Ford Speaks on Politics and Policy

"We hold our economic destiny in our own hands . . . If we blow it, we have nobody to blame but ourselves," said former President Gerald R. Ford in his remarks to the large and responsive crowd gathered in Alumni Gymnasium on February 25. Hosted by the Student Government Association and the Liberal Arts Forum, Ford's address was the main event during his visit to Elon College.

While the economy was not the focus of his speech, Ford's remark about the future of the American economy certainly reflected his belief that America still has control over its destiny.

Addressing the main topic of his speech, entitled "The Future of the Republican Party and Campaign Spending," Ford affirmed our two party system as a national "blessing." "It gives better government, better legislation and better management. It keeps us healthy," he said. But he was also firm in pointing out that our presidential nomination and election process is too long and too expensive. "It wears the candidate out, mentally and physically . . . It wears out the electorate too," he added. Ford offered partial solutions by saying that there should be a law that campaign contributions could not be accepted before January of an electoral year. He also suggested that primaries be consolidated regionally in a period of four to six weeks.

Turning to domestic issues, Ford declared that Washington has mismanaged federal fiscal affairs. The national debt is unquestionably a critical problem. "I deplore the methods employed by the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law, but I applaud the goal," he stated. He condemned the robotic-style triggers in the law, stating that Congress had abdicated its responsibility to make judgments on independent issues. "Yet if we follow the trendline of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, we can guarantee prosperity in this country," he said.

United States-Soviet relations will continue to be characterized by tough negotiations, according to Ford. "Gorbachev is formidable an he will be around for 20 years," he said. Yet Ford was pleased with the Geneva Summit and the plans for another in 1986-87. "As long as we talk, we aren't confronting each other," he remarked.

THE BIG EVENT

Months in the making, the day goes off without a hitch

From the time Gerald R. Ford stepped out of his tan Buick in front of Holland House (No one opens the president's door but the man in the right front seat, the Secret Service had warned!), until he headed off for the Greensboro Airport following his speech, Elon College was in a state of excitement.

Every detail of Ford's visit, sponsored by the Student Government Association and the Liberal Arts Forum, had been planned to the minute. Approximately 65 student and faculty leaders were waiting inside when Ford arrived at the home of the President and Mrs. Fred Young. After a brief reception line, the former president took a seat and for 45 minutes loquaciously answered questions from the students who crowded into the room around him, many sitting on the floor. His audience was rapt.

Following a brief rest, it was off to Alamance Country Club for a dinner with 125 Elon trustees and special friends. N.C. Governor James G. Martin was also there to greet Ford and the guests. Again Ford spoke graciously with individuals, often posing for pictures. After dinner—beef tenderloin and asparagus—Ford addressed the group briefly, reportedly praising Elon and the role of private colleges.

Leaving the dinner, Ford's motorcade drove to the college and across the grass to the south entrance of Mooney Building—which is now used only as an emergency exit but which had been altered and spruced up for this special occasion. The entourage quickly entered the Mooney television studio for a 15-minute press conference before a roomful of newspaper and radio reporters, photographers and TV cameramen.

A walking trip outside to Powell followed, where Ford took 30 minutes alone in President Young's office to go over his speech. Then he was whisked away from the door once more and driven to Alumni Gym. Secret Service watched unobtrusively from various points while Ford delivered a 30-minute address and answered questions from the approximately 3000 people, many of them students, who had come to hear him. Then bidding goodbye to President Young and Governor Martin, he was whisked away into his waiting car and the exciting day was over.

Ford's historic visit to Elon was months in the making. SGA President Shane Jones, with the support of President Young, invited Ford in the spring of 1985, after a conversation with Ford's son, Mike, who lives in Winston-Salem. By July the date was set. After that time, according to Jones and Dr. George Troxler, director of cultural affairs, who coordinated the visit, the list of things to do and decisions to be made multiplied at an exponential rate. Nevertheless, the occasion went off without a major hitch, or even a minor one that was apparent to any onlooker. It was a great day, all involved agreed, but no one was anxious to repeat it right away.

Letters

To the editor:
Thank you for sending the Magazine of Elon. I enjoy reading it every time. I would like to know whatever happened to Mrs. S. Hooper. She was the French teacher at Elon when I went to school. I've lost contact with her. Could you help me find her again?

Maria Von Borzell
Vikingstad, Sweden

Susie Sanford, director of alumni and parent programs, has discovered that Mrs. Suzanne Hooper is now a teacher at Western Alamance High School. We are sending you her address. She was delighted to learn that you inquired about her and would love to hear from you. Thank you for your letter.

Poindexter Is New Business Veep

Robert E. Poindexter, former assistant superintendent for business and finance with the Burlington City Schools, has been named vice president for administrative services at Elon.

He replaces John Mitchell who in November 1985 announced his intention to resign after the spring 1986 semester in order to accept a teaching position in the Department of Business Administration. Poindexter, who arrived at Elon on February 3, will work jointly with Mitchell for several months for a smooth transition.

A native of western North Carolina, Poindexter holds undergraduate and master's degrees from Western Carolina University and has done additional graduate work at UNC-Chapel Hill. Prior to being named assistant superintendent, he had served as controller and finance officer, director of personnel and a school principal for the Burlington City Schools. He is president of the North Carolina School of Business Officials Association and is generally regarded as one of the most capable and experienced business officials in the state.

John Mitchell joined the Elon staff in 1981 as the college's first vice president for administrative services.

Mitchell holds A.B. and M.B.A. degrees from Dartmouth College and has recently taught in the business department.

White Named President of Gardner-Webb

Dr. M. Christopher White, vice-president for academic and student affairs at Elon, was named president of Gardner-Webb College on December 30. White, who is 42, has served in a variety of capacities at Elon since joining the faculty as a religion professor in 1972. He held the positions of chairman of the department of religion, associate dean, and dean of academic affairs before his appointment as vice president in 1983.

White was selected for the Gardner-Webb post from a field of more than 70 candidates. A Burlington Daily Times-News editorial appearing after the announcement commented: "Elon College should be complimented that a school of Gardner-Webb's caliber would look to Elon's administration for its president." Gardner-Webb is a Southern Baptist-supported liberal arts college with an enrollment of 1800.

"We are very proud of Dr. White and pleased for him, but this is a substantial loss," said Elon President Fred Young. White came to Elon after receiving his Ph.D. in the field of Biblical Studies from Emory University. A popular professor, he was voted by students as outstanding professor of the year for three consecutive years. As vice president, he supervised academic and student affairs programs, the admissions and financial planning efforts, and academic support services for the college.

White will continue in his present capacity at Elon through the end of the academic year. He will assume the presidency of Gardner-Webb from Dr. Craven Williams on July 1. The search for a successor to Vice President White began soon after the announcement of his appointment.

An M.Ed. degree at Elon?

Is Elon considering a master's of education degree? Yes, says Dr. Wes Brogan, chairman of the Department of Education and Psychology.

According to Brogan, the education department, in response to many requests, is now designing a proposal for a graduate degree program. He cautioned, however, that thus far the program is only in the form of a proposal.

Before the master's of education degree can become a reality, the proposal must be completed by the education department and then approved by the Graduate Council, the Curriculum Committee, the faculty and the Board of Trustees, in that order. Finally, it must be approved by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools and the North Carolina Department of Public Instruction.

Over the years several school systems, including Burlington City and Alamance County schools, have inquired about a master's program at Elon, according to Brogan.

"Our local school systems have responded enthusiastically to the idea. They want their supervising teachers to have the opportunity to receive additional certification," added Dr. Chris White. "I believe this would be a good thing for Elon. Teacher education is a tradition here."

The education department prepared an interest/needs survey which was distributed to superintendents and teachers in 11 area school districts. The data gathered confirmed the interest and support for such a program.

The next step was to talk to the State Department of Public Instruction for their assessment of need, especially since several regional schools already offer the degree. With a positive response from that department, Elon requested guidelines for a program design.

New Greek Housing Postponed

The tentative plan to construct new Greek housing for up to six organizations, approved by the Board of Trustees at their fall meeting, has been postponed. According to John Mitchell, vice president for administrative services, concerns over the proposed site for the housing construction prompted the college to begin seeking different solutions for housing Elon's fraternities and sororities. "The site," he explained, "turned out to be smaller than we had hoped. We would have had to build the houses 15 feet apart and in a straight line to avoid incurring a far greater expense than either the college or the houses had planned."

Dissatisfaction over the prohibitive costs of constructing sewer and water lines and roads, along with concerns about the proposed design of the houses, also contributed to the re-evaluation of Greek housing plans. Mitchell said that the college is considering numerous alternative plans for housing these organizations, and he welcomed ideas and suggestions.

Publications Win Awards

Publications for the admissions department, including the 1985-86 admissions catalogue and several brochures, and the 1985 Investors Report have been cited for top awards in national and regional competitions.

Designer Gayle Fishel, director of publications production, has received the top design award given by the Printing Industry of the Carolinas (PICA) for her work on the admissions catalogue. The catalogue design was designated "Best in Category" for educational publications. She had previously been awarded a national Printing and Design Award of Excellence presented by Potlatch Corporation for the same publication.

In a competition sponsored by the Council for the Advancement and Support of Education (CASE), District III, the admissions package won an Award of Excellence, and a "search" or mass mailer won a Special Merit Award. Both awards were in the category of admissions and recruitment. The 1985 Investors Report won a Special Merit Award in the category of fund-raising.

The award winning publications were written by Nan Perkins, director of public information and publications, and designed by Fishel.

In the CASE competition, there were 204 entries from colleges and universities in the Southeast such as Georgia Tech, University of Virginia, Vanderbilt University and the Memphis College of Art. Most schools use professional agencies for their publications.

Elon's Department of Publications was formed about a year ago when the college purchased typesetting equipment. Now all college publications, except those for athletics, are produced in-house. The printing is done off campus by regional firms.

Dry Rush Comes to Elon

Rush—the word evokes good memories for many Elon students and alumni. Now, the memories that come from fraternity and sorority rush will be a little different. As of this spring, both fraternities and sororities at Elon will have completely eliminated alcohol from their rush activities.

"Wet" rush, with alcohol served at parties and other functions, has been outlawed for sororities since 1979, when the national Panhellenic Council made dry rush the standard. Pat Morgan, associate dean of student affairs and advisor to the local Panhellenic Council, says that dry rush is "no longer a big issue" for Elon's four sororities. But dry rush has been slower coming to fraternities on campus, who tried it on a limited basis in the fall and have recently approved rules that will totally eliminate alcohol use in rush beginning this spring.

The impetus to institute dry rush came largely from pressure by the national organizations of fraternities and sororities. Morgan and Atkins recently attended a National Interfraternity Conference meeting and found that dry rush is a very popular concept. "Fraternity leaders have become scared that fraternities were depending almost totally on their social aspect—and forgetting the concepts of brotherhood that they were built on," Atkins says.

Both Atkins and Morgan point out that the Greeks are enforcing the dry rush rules themselves, without the involvement of college officials. The Interfraternity Council will be especially strict on its members, having instituted a fine of $15 per member for any group breaking the rules. "We're backing dry rush by setting our own rules and making sure that everyone sticks to them," commented IFC President Paul Purdy.

While some Greeks are still unsure about the effect dry rush will have, many are looking forward to it. Sororities are planning a pre-rush social this year with cheese and non-alcoholic wine that they hope will serve as a model for a successful "dry party." Ed Snider, president of Sigma Pi, spoke for many Greeks when he said, "Dry rush should be great. It will let us get to know the guys and find people who really want to be part of us, not just a part of the party."

Greek Alumni Council Formed

On December 14, 1985, a group of alumni from each Greek organization at Elon met for the first time as the Elon College Greek Alumni Council. The G.A.C. has two representatives from each social fraternity and sorority at Elon, representing around 1400 total alumni. The goal of the council is to provide support for the active chapters and to help strengthen individual alumni groups. Tim Moore '78, a member of Sigma Pi Fraternity, was elected chairman of the council, and Jeff Bowling '80 of Tau Kappa Epsilon Fraternity was elected vice-chairman.

At the meetings of December 14 and January 25, the council discussed topics of interest to all members of Greek-letter organizations, ranging from Greek housing to dry rush. The council also made plans to sponsor its first annual Greek Alumni Weekend, March 14-16. "The weekend will be a good time for Greek actives and alumni to get together and strengthen their brotherhood and sisterhood," said Chairman Moore. Each fraternity and sorority will have its own activities over the weekend, and all Greek alumni will assemble for a dinner at the Lodge on Saturday at 5:00 p.m. Greek alumni interested in the weekend's activities can call their local chapters or Lisa Melton '81, chairperson of the Greek Alumni Weekend committee, at (919) 584-3919. Bob Moser, administrative assistant for the Development Office at Elon, can also be reached a 584-2380 for details.

Members of the Greek Alumni Council are as follows: Sigma Pi-Tim Moore '78 and Charlie Diehl '85; Kappa Sigma-King White '80 and Jim Zint '81; Tau Kappa Epsilon-Jeff Bowling '79 and Scott Stevenson '82; Sigma Phi Epsilon-William Newman '79 and Don Carlson '77; Kappa Alpha-Steve Martinelli '81 and Ted Reinheimer '83; Pi Kappa Phi-Chris Jernigan '78 and Roy Avery '81; Alpha Sigma Alpha-Cindi Lawson '85 and Pattie Brodie '82; Phi Mu-Angie May '84 and Patti Brammer '84; Zeta Tau Alpha-Lisa Melton '81 and Linda Wills '83; Sigma Sigma Sigma-Denese Patton '81 and Karen Welzant '85.

Ex-officio members are David Atkins, director of student activities; Pat Morgan, associate dean of student affairs; Susie Sanford '79, director of alumni and parent programs; Bob Moser '85, administrative assistant for development; Paul Purdy '86, president, Interfraternity Council; Andrea Orr '86, president, Panhellenic Council; and Shane Jones '86, president, Student Government Association.

NO WONDER THEY'RE CALLED COURT-YARDS! The appeal of Elon's beautiful campus is undisputed. Here, two students seeking relief from the January cold found refuge in a stray patch of sunlight on Jordan Court.

Emanons highlight alumni chapter gatherings

Three alumni chapters held their annual gatherings in January, with alumni and friends of the college enjoying the entertainment of The Emanons, directed by Dr. Jack White. The Emanons were performing as part of their 23rd annual tour of the East Coast.

Virginia Beach and Suffolk Chapters

On Saturday night, January 18, over 175 Elon alumni and friends from the Tidewater Virginia area enjoyed a party at the Cavalier Golf and Yacht Club in Virginia Beach. For the second year in a row, the group had the largest turnout for a chapter event. Bob '52 and Faye '52 Smithwick hosted the social which was organized by Suffolk Alumni Chapter President Betty Jean Crigger '76 and Virginia Beach Alumni Chapter President Henry Pittman '72. Many members of the college staff were there to share in the fun: Susie Bullard Sanford '79, director of alumni and parent programs, and her husband, Ronnie; Senator Tim McDowell '76, director of community relations, and his wife, Zody; Nan Perkins, director of publications and public information; Frances Stanley, coordinator of alumni giving; John Bangley '84, director of athletic fund raising; and Bob Moser '85, administrative assistant for development.

Greater Richmond Area

A dance was held for the Greater Richmond Chapter on Friday, January 24. About 75 alumni and friends were entertained by The Emanons at The Downtown Club, atop the Ross Building in Richmond. Joe and Nancy Redd '80 Penick hosted the party, assisted by Richmond Chapter President Linda Shields '67 and her husband, Bill. College staff members in attendance were Susie Bullard Sanford '79; William Long, director of foundations, government and church relations, and his wife, Marjorie; Frances Stanley; John Bangley '84 and his wife, Kathy '86; and Bob Moser '85.

Greater Washington Chapter

Over 50 alumni and friends in the Washington, D.C. area gathered to enjoy seeing old friends and dancing to the music of The Emanons on Saturday, January 25. The event, organized by Chapter President Bob Pafe '75, was held at the Springfield Hilton in Springfield, Virginia. Other local alumni who assisted were Cheryl '78 and Rick '75 Teller, Hillary and Doug '77 Durante, Mari Behrend '82, Eileen and Mike '69 Lee and Ellen Geesey '84. The college was represented by Susie Bullard Sanford '79, William Long, Frances Stanley, and John Bangley '84 and his wife, Kathy '86.

Alumni Ski Weekend

The second Elon Alumni Ski Weekend was held the weekend of January 31 through February 2 at Winter Place Ski Resort in Flat Top, West Virginia. About 50 alumni and friends hit the slopes with Director of Alumni and Parent Programs Susie Bullard Sanford '79 and Bob Moser '85, administrative assistant for development. Tim Moore '78, King White '80, Brent Whitener '79, Julie Vogelsang '83, Donna Hanes '79 and Hunt Ward '82 also helped to organize the event.

Marie '56 and Jake Thomlinson at the Washington, D.C. alumni gathering.

Judi and Russ '73 Dixon, Paulette and Wayne '71 LeGrande, Alice "Weegee" '75 and Jeff '73 Mantz.

Fighting Christian Club Holds Gathering

In January, members of the Fighting Christian Club in the Virginia Beach, Va., area gathered for fun and good food at September's, the night club owned by Elon alumnus Rex Harrison '66.

John Bangley, director of athletic fund raising, counted the evening a great success. He and Coach Macky Carden joined the club members for the event.

"This was the first social like this we've sponsored," Bangley said, "and we have plans for more. Everyone really had a good time."

Future plans include an evening in Raleigh in the spring and possible socials in the Washington, D.C., and Richmond areas later on.

Elon grad KEEPS THE REFRIGERATOR WARM

by Susan Klopman

Chip Atwater '77 and his brother, Mark, owners of Royal Textile Mills in Yanceyville, N.C., are manufacturing perhaps the biggest, and certainly the most famous, long underwear in the United States.

It all began when Royal Textile Mills came up with an ideal fabric for long underwear. It is made of layers of Lycra spandex, polypropylene and cotton, a construction which allows the fabric to stretch and "breathe." Marketed under the logo Duke Athletic Products, the ThermaForm long underwear is sold for about $35 a set.

This fall, Royal received a very special order. Ray Earley, the Chicago Bears equipment manager, called for a size double XL. There could only be one team member who would wear that size. Sure enough, it was for 300-pound William "The Refrigerator" Perry.

"Just for fun, a salesman came up with the phrase 'We Keep the Refrigerator Warm,' " Atwater said, and an advertising campaign was born.

"We mentioned using Perry as a model to our advertiser (at Luquire George Andrews, Inc. in Charlotte), and he pursued the suggestion," Atwater said. Throwing the advertising budget out the window was the first big step for this small manufacturer with 75 employees and $4 million in annual sales. It was a risk worth taking. "We were able to sign Perry to a contract to endorse our product."

Both Chip and Mark personally flew to Chicago for the photographic session with Perry. "We were there for three days and met Perry's wife and daughter too. Perry is a real nice, 'down home' fellow," Atwater commented. "He even invited us to his home in Aiken, S.C., for a 4th of July picnic."

The photograph that resulted shows Perry modeling the underwear with a live 100-pound bear looking on. "We went to a nearby animal farm to get the bear," Atwater said. "William and the bear got along just fine." Thank heavens for that.

The ad began to run in January in several trade magazines. Atwater said that even by mid-January, Royal had received attention from television, newspapers and publications all over the country. Orders have also reflected this interest. Ten other National Football League teams have started using the underwear since Perry's endorsement.

At home in Yanceyville, Atwater has two football fans of his own: his sons, David, 15, and Josh, 12, who "seem to be taking things in stride," he said. That's pretty remarkable since they are the proud owners of pictures and footballs with Perry's autograph.

For Royal Textiles, outfitting 'The Refrigerator' with long underwear has resulted in product exposure to more than 175 million people. As far as William Perry's exposure goes, he's had a very warm season playing in ThermaForm long underwear.

Former gridder makes companies

Fit for Business

By Bob Moser '86

One look at Tim James '77 tells you he's a big man. His massive chest bulges, even through his conservative business suit. And after listening to this former Elon College football player talk about his new business, you know he has ideas as big as he is.

James' business is Fitness Consultants International, Inc., a Greensboro-based operation which he founded as a result of his lifelong interest in fitness and his experiences with corporate fitness, or "wellness," programs. Meeting a growing demand for employee fitness programs, FC.I. has grown rapidly in its short history and has all the trappings of a successful organization of the future.

The company sets up fitness centers for businesses, either on-site or in industrial parks where employees from several participating corporations can have access. FC.I. uses computers to design individual programs for employees and to monitor their progress. Carefully planned and executed, it is a corporate fitness plan that James says makes it unique in the fitness business. "We are not in competition with anyone," he declares.

While he probably did not envision turning fitness into his own business, James became interested in training and health at a young age. Only 190 pounds out of Smith High School in Greensboro, he was not recruited by major colleges and came to Elon in 1972.

"My experience at Elon," he says, "was one of the greatest things that ever happened to me." A great deal of hard work and training enabled James to make it as a center at Elon, which at the time had developed into one of the leading small college football powers in the nation under coach Red Wilson.

James said that he "learned to train" while at Elon, working at various local fitness centers and summer camps and beginning to teach others how to train as well. After graduating from Elon in 1977 with a degree in business administration, he proceeded to try the improbable: become one of the few small college football players to make it in professional football. And, as he has discovered many times in his life, hard work and perseverance paid off. James played center, guard, and long snapper for teams in the Canadian and National Football Leagues and with the Chicago Blitz of the United States Football League.

While living in Buffalo in 1982 and doing a stint for the NFL Bills, James became convinced that he could run a fitness program for corporations that would be better than anything existing at the time. He continued to give health and fitness seminars, which he had begun doing at Elon, on topics such as smoking cessation, alcohol dependency and stress management. He also worked at various football camps and helped Nautilus set up fitness centers in New York. At this time he began to feel that companies were not getting their money's worth out of fitness programs.

Around this time, James met Dr. J. W. Cranston, who was instrumental in helping to turn the idea for corporate fitness into a reality. Beginning in 1980, James worked at summer football camps run by Pittsburgh Steeler star and good friend Jack Lambert. Cranston was the medical director at the camp and at Kent State University. James and Cranston began to collaborate on the idea of a "total" fitness program which would tailor an exercise routine to each individual's needs, as well as provide a way for the company to check up on the progress of employee fitness. They set up a totally computerized medical screening, which designs a fitness program for each person and a way to monitor individual advancement on a regular basis.

James tried out his ideas by starting Sports Fitness Training Corporation, Inc., in New York. With only $50 in a commercial checking account, he went door-to-door promoting the corporation and conducting his seminars. Then James made what would be a very propitious decision: he returned to his hometown, Greensboro, lured by the attraction of industrial parks in the area. James continued to conduct his research and to program computers for screening and monitoring. In addition, he hired fitness experts (trained exercise physiologists) and pulled together investors from other fields, like law and business. Carl Stewart Jr., former Speaker of the State House of Representatives, is the full-time executive vice president of FC.I. FC.I. was incorporated in April of 1984, but James' hard work had only begun.

James' extensive planning shows impressive results, and companies are taking advantage of FC.I.'s unique approach. The business is growing rapidly, having recently opened a facility at Research Triangle Park in Raleigh and at Greensboro's Airpark West. James says that Airpark West is his "flagship" operation—an example of what he has envisioned for his corporate wellness centers. After opening a center for Glaxo, Inc. in Research Triangle, FC.I. will begin looking to interstate expansion.

In his centers, James strives to stay away from the "sweat shop" look and feel. The centers feature well-designed interior decoration, with exercise equipment color-coordinated to match the decor. James proudly points out the details—including a thick, well-padded aerobics floor designed to cut down on injuries. The centers are spacious, with juice and salad bars, whirlpools, saunas, and FC.I.'s own line of equipment, which James hopes to market in the future.

"I am very proud to have gone to Elon," he says emphatically. In addition to praising the academic program, he lauds the athletic program, calling it "tremendous" James believes that he was as well prepared both mentally and physically for professional football as any of his counterparts from the big "football factories."

Tim James leans back for a moment, looking around his office at the diagrams, plans and volumes of information which have turned his love for health and fitness into the successful Fitness Consulting International, Inc. "Elon," he says, "was the basis for all of this." He stands up as his eyes meet a table full of checklists and reminders in another room. Perhaps, he explains, it is a good thing to be an expert on stress management when you face 16-hour workdays trying to develop a business. Tim James heads for the table in the next room, ready to explain some more about his very big plans.

Morningstar To Take New Job

Bill Morningstar, Elon's head basketball coach since 1979, has resigned that position and has accepted the job of Director of Athletic Fundraising. He will retain his position as golf coach.

"I've been thinking about it [resigning] for the past couple years," Morningstar said in an interview with the Burlington Daily Times News. "It just seemed like it was the right time. . ."

Morningstar, a 1964 graduate of Elon, was a former guard on the team. He served as an assistant under head coach Bill Miller from 1973 to 1979. Since becoming head coach, Morningstar's career record is 96-100. He is a former CIAC Coach of the Year.

Dr. Alan White, director of athletics, said that the college is delighted that Morningstar has decided to take the fundraising position.

"He is an industrious, loyal and very capable person and has been a valuable asset to our athletic program all the years. He likes people, and he loves Elon and the Elon athletic program. We look forward to our continued work together," White said.

Sports Outlook

Baseball

With graduation and professional baseball leaving many key positions to be filled in 1986, head coach Rick Jones looks for a semi-rebuilding season for the Fightin' Christians.

The addition of seven junior college transfers, three four-year transfers and 10 freshmen may cause the process to be pushed up quickly, however. In fact, with some good pitching, Jones believes his team may have another chance to reach the NAIA College World Series in Lewiston, Ind.

Jones must rebuild his mound staff. To help with that, he points to junior Jeffy C.W. Willis, 5-0 with five saves, sophomore Benny Tart, 4-1, junior Mickey Dean, 3-1, and red-shirt players Robby Schoonover and Jeff Girton.

Heading the outfield is senior All-America candidate Troy Harris. Joining him will be JUCO All-America Jimmy Caldwell, who amassed 51 rbi's at Louisburg College, and transfers Andy Barrick, Tom Alessi and Randy Warren.

With sophomore Kendall Carter and freshman David Crouse in reserve, this could be the finest outfield in Elon baseball history. The key to the season, however, will be the pitching. "If it comes through, we should do well," Jones said.

Men's Tennis

1986 will mark a change for men's tennis at Elon. Tom Parham, who coached for twenty years at Atlantic Christian College, will be in his first season as mentor of the Fightin' Christians. Parham's career includes two NAIA Championships (1979, 1984) and three awards as NAIA National Coach of the Year in men's tennis.

Coach Parham will not be without some talented players. Billy Mitchell returns and should be one of the premier performers in the Carolinas Conference and in NAIA District 26. Mitchell will be complimented by All-District performers Duane Johnson and Jeff Hooks who have been appointed by Parham as co-captains for this season.

Winter Sports

Men's Basketball

The men's basketball team under Coach Bill Morningstar stands 12-8 overall, 7-3 in the Carolinas Conference, and 9-6 in the District 26 action.

Leading the Christians as they head into the final months of the season is senior forward Warren Wallace of Charlotte, NC. The 6'4" sharpshooter is averaging 17.1 points per game and 3.8 rebounds while 6'5" sophomore Bernard Torain of Hurdle Mills, NC., is averaging 11.6 points and 6.0 rebounds per game.

Women's Basketball

In her first season as head coach of the Lady Christians, Coach Jackie Myers has struggled. Leading a relatively youthful team, the Christians are 4-16 overall, 2-9 in the Carolinas Conference, and 2-10 in District 26 action.

Wrestling

Jim Richardson's wrestling team currently stands 4-6 in dual meet action. Despite the record, Richardson is confident that the Elon grapplers will be well prepared for District 26 and NAIA National action in late February.

L. J. "Hap" Perry, P.O. Box 5646, Sun City Center, Fla.

Lindsay Jackson "Hap" Perry, legendary Elon player and coach, died on January 24 in Tampa, Florida, at age 89. Perry, a native of Jonesboro, NC., graduated magna cum laude from Elon in 1923 after earning 12 varsity letters for football, basketball and baseball. He returned to Elon in 1945 after accumulating outstanding coaching records at Reidsville High School and helped lay the groundwork for Elon's athletic program.

Hap Perry returned to Reidsville after coaching Elon football and earned acclaim for his work as Rockingham County school superintendent and as longtime director of the North Carolina High School Athletic Association (NCHSAA). He is credited with leading North Carolina's high school athletics to national prominence. In 1972, Hap Perry became one of the original inductees into the Elon College Sports Hall of Fame.

The family of Hap Perry has requested that memorials be sent to the Hap Perry Athletic Scholarship Endowment at the college. The endowment, begun in 1985 by Perry's sons, provides an annual scholarship for a student-athlete from Reidsville.

Norman B. "Muddy' Waters, 5531 Wayne Road, Greensboro, NC.

Norman B. "Muddy" Waters, a standout athlete for Elon in the early 1930s, died on January 26 at the age of 77. Waters lettered in both baseball and football and was a 1977 inductee in the Elon College Sports Hall of Fame.

Waters, a native of Washington, NC., came to Elon in 1930 and lettered for four years in football. An all-conference performer, he was named to the All-Time Elon Football team by alumni in 1949. Waters was also one of the first baseball pitchers to win 20 games for the Fightin' Christians and also achieved a career batting average of .318.

Waters was a longtime resident of Greensboro and was retired from the Men's Wear Division of Burlington Industries.

Estate Planning:
An Investment in Tomorrow

By Dr. Brank Proffitt,
Director of Deferred Giving

What is an estate?

The word "estate" may evoke images of landed gentry with big houses and servants. Or for the less romantically inclined, the first thought may be that it pertains to the property and debts of a deceased or bankrupt person. Certainly these meanings have been strongly associated with the word over the years.

For our purposes, however, the word has a more practical and useful meaning. As an alumnus, alumna, or friend of Elon College, you have an estate. Your estate is what you own, the whole of your possessions, including such things as your house, income, savings, other investments, insurance, retirement benefits, personal effects, and the cash in your pocket. Many people have larger estates than they realize, simply because their attention tends to be drawn to things of the moment and they do not keep an up-to-date valuation of their total assets.

Exercising your property rights

One very intangible but highly valuable, and even precious, asset which belongs to you as an estate owner is the legal rights which you have with respect to the acquisition, management, use, and disposition of your property. It is in relation to this asset—this set of rights—that the concept of estate planning has meaning. Wise and timely planning helps to insure that you will exercise these rights in the most beneficial and personally satisfying ways.

What is estate planning?

Many people may think of estate planning only as deciding how to dispose of property at the death of the estate owner. While this is one of the most important, if often delayed or neglected, steps in the planning process, estate planning is much more comprehensive in its meaning. It is concerned with how to build an estate, how to protect it against erosion and economic pitfalls, how to enlarge it, how to make informed decisions in the management and use of it, and how to pass it on in keeping with the owner's wishes and objectives. In this larger sense, estate planning is something you should do all of your adult life, not just when you make a will.

Estate planning for young adults

Young adults, who have not inherited an estate or have not had substantial gifts of property or income from family members, may understandably be preoccupied with meeting living expenses. As someone has said: "When you are in water up to your neck, with alligators all around you, your first priority is not going to be planning how to drain the swamp."

Basic financial questions for such young adults will be how to earn a steady income, how to have a place to live, how to build up a savings account, and what insurance to buy. Probably the number one caution for them is to keep their standard of living within their means. Early in their careers they should have a plan for systematic saving, which is the beginning of an estate. Conservation of assets is a theme that pervades all estate planning.

Planning for emergencies

We all know about emergencies. Unfortunately many of us think of an emergency as something which happens to others. Try telling young people about the Great Depression! How many of the people you know really take to heart the admonition of financial advisers to keep at least six months of income in a readily available account reserved for financial emergencies?

The truth is that emergencies do occur and may happen to any of us. Knowing this, an important thrust of your financial planning should be precautionary in nature, designed to protect you against, or lessen the effects of, emergencies which may confront you, such as:

- Loss of job
- Major illness or accident, with all of the financial problems which attend either of these
- Total and permanent disability
- Legal liability incurred in an accident, in business, in the practice of a profession, or in other unexpected ways.
- Death

Since you cannot remove the risk of such emergencies altogether, how can you protect yourself and your family?

1. You can build up a cash reserve.
2. You can insure yourself: life insurance to protect your dependents; major medical insurance to guard against catastrophic health costs; disability income insurance to offset losses which result from being disabled and to allow time for making necessary adjustments; adequate automobile insurance to protect yourself and others; homeowners and other property insurance as needed;
3. You can conserve your resources, avoid excessive debt, anticipate any unusual financial demands, such as taxes, which you have to meet, and thus keep yourself as financially strong as possible.
4. You can be alert to, and take advantage of, available government programs, state and federal, which are designed to protect against disability, illness, or other hazard, such as state workmen's compensation, Social Security, veteran's benefits, and military service-related government insurance.

Planning for retirement

You may have years to go before you expect to retire, but you should start planning for retirement years ahead of the event. Otherwise you may come to the time of retirement without the satisfaction of financial security and the means for a reasonable standard of living.

Planning for retirement is as much a part of estate planning as planning for employment during the working career. Retirement benefits and assets must be accumulated over the working years if you want to be free from financial worries and live comfortably during retirement. Even if you set a modest standard of living for your retirement years, you can be sure that you will need more income than Social Security and incidental savings will provide.

The surest way to provide an adequate retirement income is through a well-structured pension plan. But you must try to make sure that your pension plan is sound by understanding how it is funded, when you are covered, and how the benefits are distributed. Another important question is when are some or all of your benefits "vested." To the extent that you have become "vested," you will not lose these benefits if you leave your present employer and take another job. And the ultimate question is: how safe is the pension plan? Will the expected benefits be there when you retire?

You should have a retirement savings plan in addition to Social Security and your employment-related pension plan. Systematic participation in company profit-sharing plans, individual retirement accounts (IRAs), tax-sheltered annuities, money market funds, and other savings accounts can make possible significant accumulations of retirement funds. In deciding on a retirement savings plan, be sure to take into consideration the possibility of employer contributions and available tax breaks.

Other kinds of wise investments can increase your estate and thus prepare you for retirement. Investment requires you to weigh the expected benefits against possible risks. A good rule is to venture into high-risk investments only to the extent that you feel you can afford to lose the money invested. Keep in mind that only successful investments make money for you. On the other hand, no investor is successful 100 percent of the time. And all investments have some risk associated with them. You have to decide how much risk you are willing to incur in the light of your financial responsibilities, the discretionary funds you have available, and the information you have concerning potential investments.

Part of your investment strategy should be to avoid unnecessary taxes. But over the long term, you need a balanced investment program which will make the best use of your discretionary funds to help you realize your estate planning objective. For an increasing number of Elon alumni, alumnae, and other friends, an Elon College life income plan has become an important part of their retirement plans.

Making use of advisers

Wealthy persons have long made use of advice aimed at protecting and enlarging their estates. Complicated tax laws and the competition for investment dollars have caused many middle-income individuals to seek advice in tax matters and in making major investment decisions.

A great amount of common sense needs to be exercised concerning when you really need advice, what kind of advice you need, from whom you will seek advice, and how much you should spend for it. Except from a family member or good friend, serious advice is not likely to be free, even though you may not pay a fee for the advice itself. When you accept it and act on it, you either pay for it directly or indirectly through a commission, brokerage fee, or the like.

Do not hesitate to check out the reputation and qualifications of legal, financial, or tax advisers. You may be in a position to do this through knowledgeable acquaintances or local agencies such as the Better Business Bureau. Satisfied clients or customers are always good sources of information. If necessary, inquiries can be made to state licensing agencies or departments that regulate business practices.

Other good ways of informing yourself and increasing your own competence in financial matters are reading and talking with people who are more experienced than you. Much useful information is published now, some of it in books, magazines and newspapers, much of it in newsletter or digest form. But there are times when personal advisers should be used. Seek advice when you have a clear need for it and select your advisers on the basis of the best information you can get.

From Medieval to Modern: History and Music Combine in John Marshall Carter

Do the Bayeux Tapestry and the Wampus cat have anything in common? As a matter of fact, the two have a mutual friend, Dr. John Marshall Carter, 1971 graduate of Elon and currently a professor of history at East Carolina University.

Carter is the editor of The Bayeux Tapestry as a Social Document, Selected Readings. The tapestry is housed in Bayeux, Normandy, and dates back to the 1070s. It contains more than fifty-eight different scenes and has served as a unique source of information about life in medieval times. Since history of the Middle Ages is his specialty, it's easy to see why Carter is interested in this tapestry.

The Wampus cat, on the other hand, is a legendary creature of the Dan River. "His very fictitious existence conjures up a longing for the days of yesteryear," writes Carter. Perhaps it was this sentiment which led Carter to choose the name Wampus Cats for his Eden, N.C.,-based band.

For years, Carter dreamed of combining his songs, his musical friends and the record business. 1985 saw that dream come to pass. "The Ballad of Leaksville, Spray and Draper" is a poem written by Carter and published in a book of poetry, Wampus Cats and Dan River Rimes. Now it is also a 45 RPM record performed by the Wampus Cats band.

Carter and his friend Ron Martin had been hoping to cut a record since 1971. "Finally we lured some of our musician friends from the sixties out of semi-retirement and rendezvoused with them on March 1, 1985," he writes. The result was not only the creation of a band and a record, but also performance engagements and international exposure in British, German and Latin American newspapers, according to Carter.

What's ahead for Carter and the Wampus Cats? 1986 promises a recording date for an album of ten original songs by Carter and Martin. What about a ballad on Bayeux, Dr. Carter?

Tim Cox: Triple Major Turned Leathersmith

By Meredith Lee '86

Put a hole punch, hammer, a scallop tool and tanned leather in the hands of Elon graduate Tim Cox '76 and in almost no time at all, he has created a belt. "From cow to belt," said Cox. "All it needs is a man."

Cox graduated from Elon with a triple major in business administration, accounting and economics. They're the skills he employs during the day as store manager of Ramseur Building Supply, a family business.

At night Cox operates Leather and Brass, Inc. from the basement of his home. His six-employee operation produces North Carolina hand-made leather products—from pocketbooks, cigarette pack holders and belts to caps, vests and women's bikinis. He sells his leather products at fairs and to wholesalers. He averages about 15 shows a year himself. He enjoys working with leather products. "I just picked it up when I was in college," he said. "It's something you get into and keep growin' I reckon." He takes pride in the fact that he does all the leather working by hand. "When you get through, you can see what you've done," he said. Cox's triple major fits into the leather business as well. He has calculated production very systematically. "You have to base your price on optimum production. With an inch and three-quarters (width of leather), I've figured we should be able to make four belts per man per hour. If I have three people working for five hours, we should be able to produce 60 inch-and three-quarter belts," he said.

The talent and business skills make a powerful combination. At a show in the fall, Cox figured he should take about 45 dozen belts. He came home with only three dozen. Between the handsome leather work and the careful business management, Cox has created a successful world that he loves.

Business Scholarship Honors William Raymond Massey

William H. (Bill) Massey and David Massey '83 have established a business scholarship in memory of their grandfather, William Raymond Massey. The scholarship will be awarded annually to a rising junior who has declared business administration as his major. Preference will be given to an Alamance County resident.

At Elon David Massey was a business major and a member of Epsilon Beta Epsilon, the business honor society. "Ever since I left Elon, I have wanted to give something back to the college," David said. "This scholarship is the most exciting thing I've ever done." He added that he hopes other people will remember Elon by establishing scholarships or making donations to the Massey Scholarship "so the fund can keep growing in service to students at Elon."

According to David, the endowment of this scholarship is in keeping with William Massey's interest in education. "He was a very generous man and often helped students obtain a college education by being their benefactor," he said.

Massey came to Burlington in 1928 and began City Ice Services and Burlington Truckers. He was later one of the organizers of Carolina Casualty Insurance Company and owned Peoples Insurance Company in Burlington. He died in 1981.

Bill and David Massey also share their grandfather's interest in the insurance business. They are currently president and vice president, respectively, of James L. Massey, Inc., a realty and insurance agency in Burlington.

Danieleys Host Alums at ECU Grad School

It was "Elon night" in Greenville, N.C., on Wednesday, January 22, when a group of Elon alumni who now study at the East Carolina University graduate school gathered for a dinner hosted by Dr. and Mrs. J. Earl Danieley. A total of eleven alumni, many of whom attend the School of Medicine at E.C.U., were in attendance.

While in Greenville, the Danieleys also visited with Professor Waitus W. Howell '36 and his wife, the former Sue Craft. They were both members of the faculty at Elon in the early 1940's and are retired and living in Greenville. Mrs. Howell, at age 83, still serves as a substitute teacher in the local high school. Dr. Danieley was at E.C.U. to attend a meeting of the statewide Task Force on Teacher Preparation, and he invited the sizable group of Elon alumni who are pursuing graduate studies in medicine and related fields to dine with him and Mrs. Danieley.

Elon College alumni enrolled in graduate studies at E.C.U. include: David Osborne '81, Mark Kemp '84, Nish Bynum Jackson '81, Chuck Mills '81, Bob James '82, Sharon Foster '84, Dr. Gregg Sigmon '72, Jerry Hooker '84, Gene Botwright '85, Emmett Montgomery '83, and Nathan Pulkingham '82. Others dining with the Danieleys were Cindy Horner Osborne '81, Hope Newman Kemp '86, Karen James, Dr. Evelyn McNeil '51, and David '81 and Hope Vaughn.

Edwin Yoder Addresses Graduates

Pulitzer Prize-winning columnist and North Carolina native Edwin M. Yoder Jr. addressed the graduates of Elon College at the 96th annual commencement exercises held at Alumni Memorial Gymnasium at 10:30 a.m. on Sunday, May 18. Among the 400 graduates were the first students to receive the master of business administration degree from Elon.

Yoder, a Greensboro native who grew up in Mebane, N.C., is currently a syndicated columnist with The Washington Post Writers Group and a biweekly columnist for U.S. News and World Report. In 1979 he received a Pulitzer Prize for Editorial Writing.

For many years Yoder was an editor and writer for the Greensboro Daily News. He has also contributed to various national journals and magazines and is the author of the book The Night of the Old South Ball.

Yoder received BA degrees from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and Oxford University where he was a Rhodes Scholar, the first recipient of this scholarship in Alamance County history. He has a master's degree and in 1983 was awarded an honorary doctor of humane letters from Grinnell College.

Elon also awarded Yoder an honorary doctor of humane letters degree at the commencement ceremony.

Receiving the honorary degree along with Yoder were Kyong Soon Han, professor of music at Sangmyong Women's University in Seoul, South Korea; Lawrence W. I'Anson, retired Chief Justice of the Virginia Supreme Court and president of the Beazley Foundation; and Edward R. Zane, a Greensboro attorney and CPA who serves as the executive director of the Martha and Spencer Love Foundation.

Edwin M. Yoder Jr.

Ms. Han received undergraduate and graduate music degrees from Ehwa Women's University and Sookmyong Women's University in Seoul. Her choral recitals have included performances in Korea as well as the United States. In 1981 she sang with the Harvard-MIT Women's Choral Society and served as the director of the New England Korean Choral Society in Boston, Massachusetts. She is the author of numerous publications on music techniques.

Lawrence W. I'Anson served as Chief Justice of the Virginia Supreme Court from 1974 until his retirement in 1981. He is a graduate of the College of William and Mary and the University of Virginia. He is a member of the Alpha Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa and was admitted to the Virginia bar in 1931. He has been awarded doctoral degrees from William and Mary and the Dickinson School of Law. He is currently president of the Beazley Foundation, which has been a sustaining force for Frederick College, Frederick Military Academy and the Eastern Virginia Medical School. The Foundation has contributed substantially to several colleges in Virginia and North Carolina, including Elon.

Edward R. Zane served as an auditor and tax counsel for Burlington Industries for many years before being named chairman of the Executive and Financial Committees of the Board of Directors, a position he held until 1968. He currently serves on the Board of Directors of Wachovia Bank and Trust Company and as a trustee for the L. Richardson Memorial Hospital in Greensboro, the Boy's Home of North Carolina, and the A&T University Foundation in addition to the Martha and Spencer Love Foundation. The Love Foundation was the recent grantor of a $1 million gift to Elon College. In honor of the gift, the business school has been named The Martha and Spencer Love School of Business.

Commencement weekend activities began on Saturday afternoon with the college worship service at 4 p.m. in the Elon College Community Church. The Reverend Reuben A. Sheares II, executive director of the Office for Church Life and Leadership for the United Church of Christ, was the guest minister.

At 5 p.m., graduating seniors, their families and friends were the guests of the Alumni Association" and the faculty at a reception on Scott Plaza. Saturday evening at 7:30 p.m., seniors had their own forum when the best writers, speakers and musicians of the Class of '86 took the stage for the first annual Senior Showcase. Following graduation on Sunday, there was a reception for the graduates and their families on Scott Plaza.

Elon Names New V-P

Dr. Warren L. Board, provost of Kalamazoo College in Kalamazoo, Michigan, has been named vice president for academic and student affairs at the college.

Board succeeds M. Christopher White, who is leaving Elon to become president of Gardner-Webb College in Boiling Springs, N.C. Board's appointment is effective July 1, 1986.

"Dr. Board was our first choice for this extremely important position," said Dr. Fred Young, president of Elon College, in making the announcement. "We are fortunate to attract a person of his qualifications, background and ability who has experience at an institution as prestigious as Kalamazoo College."

Board has been provost at Kalamazoo since 1978 and was assistant provost prior to that time. As chief academic officer, the provost has responsibility for the entire educational program of the college, the faculty, and all instructional support services and personnel.

Under Board's leadership, financial resources for faculty development at Kalamazoo were increased fivefold, and a number of academic programs were initiated or refined, including the school's Liberal Studies program. He also supervised the design and development of Kalamazoo's educational computer resources and coordinated the college's unique career development program, which makes foreign study and internships available to all students.

Board received his B.A. degree from the University of Idaho, M.A. from the University of Denver, and Ph.D. in Higher Education Administration from Syracuse University. Prior to coming to Kalamazoo, he was executive assistant to the president of Elmira College in Elmira, New York. He is a member of the board of directors of the Great Lakes Colleges Association and a member of the board of regents of Eastern Michigan University, the first educator from the private sector ever appointed to the board of a Michigan public university.

At Elon Board will be responsible for all academic and student life programs, as well as admissions, registration and the library. The vice president for academic and student affairs holds the second highest administrative office and acts for the president in his absence.

Board and his wife, Mary Jo, are natives of Boise, Idaho. Mrs. Board is a trust officer with First America Bank Corporation. They are the parents of three children.

Yes, Allison... Elon Has a Place For You

Elon President Fred Young recently received the following letter. With Allison's and her parents' permission, it is reprinted for all to enjoy.

Ahoskie, N.C.
27910

Elon College Office
Burlington, N.C.

Dear Dr. Fred Young,

Hi! My name is Allison Hargrave. The band at your school came to my school called Ridgecroft. My mom Marilyn C. Hargrave went to your school and my dad Willie E. Hargrave did to. I want to know about your college. I would like to have a nice girl that could write to me and tell me. I am 10 years old. Would you please send me a letter back and tell me if it can be worked out. My parents say you have a beautiful college. If you decide to please send me her name and address if she lives with somebody else. When you send a newspaper to our house my parents let me look at it. My teacher says I am a good student in dividing. I would like to know if you would send me a picture of Elon College. I might go to college at Elon.

Thank you!

Yours Truly,
Allison Hargrave

I'm a fan of yours.

Dear Allison,

Thank you for your nice letter. It certainly brightened my day. I believe your teacher must say that you are a good student in writing too.

I have asked a student who goes to Elon to write to you, but I would like to tell you some things about Elon as well.

One of the nicest things about Elon is that it is a good size—not too big but not too small either. It is big enough that you can study many different subjects here and take part in all sorts of sports or clubs or other activities that you like or want to know more about. But Elon is not so big that you have to be afraid of getting lost, or not making friends or not knowing your teachers. At Elon your teacher might be your friend as well.

Another nice thing about Elon is that students come here from many different places. Your friends here might be from another state like Virginia or Maryland or even Massachusetts—or from another country. You might also get to visit another country to live and study for a while. Many Elon students do.

I am glad that you think you might like to go to Elon. You sound like the kind of student we like to have—someone who asks a lot of questions. We are working hard to be sure that Elon will be the kind of school you will want to attend when you are ready for college. People like your mom and dad are helping us do that.

Study hard, Allison, and keep asking questions. Someday you will be giving the answers.

Trustees Approve M.Ed., Tuition Increase

The Elon College Board of Trustees approved the 1986-87 budget, authorized the establishment of a second graduate degree at Elon, and heard reports on the construction and financing of the new fine arts center during its annual spring meeting, Wednesday, March 5, 1986.

The $14 million budget approved by the board for the 1986-87 academic year includes raising tuition to $4200.

"We are simply having to budget for the quality that is inherent in our programs," said President Fred Young in commenting on the new tuition level. "Even with this increase Elon will remain one of the least expensive private institutions in the state."

Revenue resulting from the increase will be used to pay for new programs and personnel, to increase salaries, and to purchase additional educational equipment and resources, according to Young. "Part of the money will also be used to increase the financial aid available to those for whom the tuition will be a hardship," he stated.

After hearing a presentation from the Educational Affairs Committee, the board unanimously approved the establishment of a master of education degree at Elon.

The board also reviewed the status of the fine arts center construction and heard a report on the special campaign to raise the funds needed to complete financing for the center. As of mid-February, one-third of the $1.5 million needed had been pledged. A report from the Development Committee indicated that development income over the past year was up 16 percent to about $3 million.

In other business, the board granted tenure to Dr. James A. Moncure, professor of history, and approved the following promotions:

To full professor—Dr. David M. Crowe Jr., Dr. Russell B. Gill, Dr. William G. Rich and Dr. Frederic T. Watts.

To associate professor—Dr. Nancy E. Harris, Dr. Robie W. McClellan, Dr. Gerardo Rodriguez, and Dr. Bruce N. Waller.

To assistant professor—Betty Greene and Susan L. Piepke.

One new trustee was introduced at the meeting, Robert E. LaRose of Clifton, Virginia. Mr. LaRose, a 1966 graduate of Elon, is president and chief executive officer of Advanced Technology, Inc., a high technology consulting firm which he founded in 1976. The board also elected Paul C. Purdy, a fourth generation Elon student and member of the Class of 1986, as new youth trustee.

M.Ed. To Be Offered in '86

Elon's new master of education degree received overwhelming approval from the Southern Association of Colleges and Universities following a committee's visit in early May. Courses for the degree will be offered for the first time in the fall of 1986.

The M.Ed. will be offered in the areas of elementary education, middle grades education and physical education, according to Dr. Wes Brogan, chairman of the department of education and psychology. In each area, a minimum of 30 semester hours will be required from a core of required courses and a group of electives. The program will be offered through evening courses during the regular semester and in the summer.

Professor Ken Harper of the education and psychology department has been named director of graduate admissions. His responsibilities will include admissions to the M.Ed. and M.B.A. programs. Basic admissions requirements for the M.Ed. include graduation from a four-year accredited college and teacher certification. Upon completion of the M.Ed. course, students will receive a graduation certification from the N.C. Department of Public Instruction.

Powell Gift to Establish Master Artist Series

Dr. James B. Powell, a member of the Board of Trustees and president of Roche Biomedical Laboratories in Burlington, has established a fund to bring famous artists to the campus each year for the next several years. The series, named in honor of his wife, will be known as the Anne Ellington Powell Master Artist Series.

The series will feature performing artists of national and world renown. A variety of activities, including a public performance, meeting with classes and informal discussions, will be included in the yearly series.

President Fred Young said the series will greatly complement the new fine arts center now under construction and scheduled to open in the fall of 1987.

"I believe that this series will be a source of great pride to Dr. and Mrs. Powell, their family members, and all of us at Elon College," Dr. Young said.

"Commencing in 1987-88, Elon College will have one of the finest artists in the world on campus each year for a public presentation and to work with students. This gift will enhance the education of thousands of young people."

A native of Elon College, Dr. Powell has served on the Elon College Board of Trustees since 1979. He received his undergraduate degree from Virginia Military Institute and the M.D. degree from Duke University Medical School. Dr. Powell founded Biomedical Laboratories, Inc., which was acquired by Hoffman-La Roche, Inc. in 1982.

Anne Ellington Powell

Mrs. Powell is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Robert Norwood Ellington of Burlington. She is a graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill with a B.S. degree in business administration. She was employed by Proctor and Gamble as a sales representative prior to her marriage.

Dr. Powell served as chairman of the Elon College PRIDE II Campaign which raised over $8 million for the new fine arts center, endowments, campus improvements and operating funds. The Anne Ellington Powell Master Artist Series is a part of his commitment to the campaign.

Shirley Chisholm Addresses Women's Issues in Politics

"We need the collective talents of all mankind for the amelioration of the human condition," said Shirley Chisholm, sounding not only the keynote of her address, but also the theme of her life as she spoke to a filled auditorium on the Elon campus March 19.

Chisholm's itinerary included dinner with students from the Black Cultural Society, the Liberal Arts Forum and the Student Union Board, the three groups sponsoring her visit. She spoke to a range of national problems during a press conference and later focused specifically on women in politics, the title of her evening address.

Calling women the "backbone" of American politics, Chisholm lauded their long-term service to the nation's political parties. "They fixed the refreshments, gathered the petitions and helped raise the money to put men in office," she said, dignifying those often unnoticed, behind-the-scenes jobs. But women are hampered politically, according to Chisholm, because they are not viewed as serious political candidates and thus have trouble raising money. "Women are considered risky business by our political parties because when they run, the money doesn't come in," she said.

In sum, women must be considered a vital part of our national political scene if we are to offer a legacy to our children, Chisholm reiterated. Healing the wounds of poverty and unemployment, constructively working for a future for healthy people on a healthy planet will take the efforts of all men and women.

Chisholm, 61, served seven terms in Congress, representing the 12th Congressional District of New York. In 1972, she seriously campaigned for the Democratic Party nomination for President, the first Black woman to seek that office. She did not seek re-election to Congress in 1982, announcing instead her intention to write, teach, lecture and travel "to create a new national state of mind that demands peace, prosperity, and equality for all Americans." She now holds the Purington Chair at Mount Holyoke College.

McEwen Service Award Established

The Iris Holt McEwen Community Service Award has been established at the college by three of her grandchildren, Mrs. Katherine McCrary Johnson of Durham, N.C., John Alexander McCrary III of Baltimore, Md., and James McEwen McCrary of St. Petersburg, Florida.

Beginning in the spring of 1987, the McEwen award will be presented annually to a student "whose selfless service to the college and the wider community most nearly exemplifies the compassionate public spirit and numerous humanitarian activities" of Mrs. McEwen. The recipient of the award will be presented with a commemorative medallion as well as a cash award to be applied equally to the student's tuition and fees and a community service organization of his or her choosing.

"Iris Holt McEwen had an extraordinary impact on those around her and on Elon College, and this award is a fitting tribute to her memory," said Dr. Fred Young, president of the college, in announcing the creation of the award. "We are grateful to her grandchildren for continuing her deep commitment to Elon and becoming the third generation in the McEwen family to support the college."

Iris Holt McEwen was a member of the Elon Board of Trustees from 1948 until her death in 1984. She and her husband, James H. McEwen, also a former trustee of the college, were among the college's most loyal benefactors. The James H. McEwen Memorial Dining Hall and the Iris Holt McEwen Library are both named in recognition of the family's generous donations. In 1970 Mrs. McEwen was awarded an honorary doctoral degree.

Mrs. McEwen had a long career of community service. A trustee and former president of the Elon Home for Children, she also served for many years as chairman of the Board of Public Welfare of Alamance County and was vice president of the local Council of Social Agencies. Mrs. McEwen was a member of the First Christian United Church of Christ and founder of the Iris McEwen Sunday School Class. She also served on church boards and committees at the conference and convention level.

The three donors of the award are the children of John and Iris McEwen McCrary of Burlington. Mrs. McCrary is the daughter of Iris Holt and James H. McEwen. The donors' uncle, James H. McEwen Jr. of New York City, is also a trustee of the college.

Elon Grad Named State Teacher of Year

Donna H. Oliver '72, a biology teacher at Cummings High School in Burlington, has been named North Carolina Teacher of the Year for 1986-87.

Oliver has taught in the Burlington school system for 13 years. She received her undergraduate degree at Elon and earned a master's degree in education from the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

Oliver was selected for this honor over two other finalists from a field of regional candidates. The award was announced at the April meeting of the N.C. Board of Education. As state teacher of the year, she will spend the next school year studying, traveling and promoting education in North Carolina. She will represent the state in the national teacher of the year competition as well.

The chairman of the science department at Cummings, Oliver has previously been honored for excellence in teaching. She is a recipient of the National Science Teachers Association's Excellence in Science Teaching Award and was a regional winner of the Governor's Business Award in Math and Science.

She has been active with students outside the classroom at Cummings, serving as adviser to the student government association and science coach for the High IQ team. She also teaches piano to underprivileged children and advises the Cummings Student Academy of Science. Her principal, J.A. Freeman, credits her with "a unique blend of qualities: intelligence, creativity, rare patience and good humor." She has had to use all of these assets to become North Carolina's teacher of the year.

Oliver is not the first Elon graduate to win this prestigious honor. Linda Lee '65, who was also with the Burlington City Schools, was named North Carolina Teacher of the Year for the 1980-81 year.

Donna Oliver—Number one in the classroom world she loves.

Phonathon Exceeds Goal

The seventh annual Phonathon, held February 10-March 6, exceeded its goal of $150,000. A total of $173,031 was pledged to the Annual Fund. Matching gift donations will add another $18,000 to that figure.

Dr. Jerry Tolley, director of the Phonathon, and Frances T. Stanley, coordinator of alumni giving, reported that the college is very pleased with the results. Alumni, friends and parents of current and former students were among the 15,000 people telephoned. "There were more pledges than ever this year," Tolley noted. "Most impressive was the number of new donors and the increased amounts from previous donors."

Many fraternities, sororities and other campus service organizations offered their support by providing the 120 student callers.

Pledges to the Annual Fund help to keep tuition low by providing for college operating expenses. Elon's generous alumni support has enabled the college to achieve the number one ranking in alumni participation among all co-ed colleges and universities in North Carolina. Elon alumni are also ranked number 16 in the Southeast, a ranking which the college is challenging this year. "The goal is to be in the top ten in the Southeast," Tolley said. "And it looks like we will be, if the Phonathon pledges come in as promised."

Thespians present The Fantasticks

"Try to remember…when life was slow and oh, so mellow…." Life was anything but slow and mellow for three nights in April when Elon's fine arts department presented The Fantasticks.

With lots of talent and energy, Roger Stanley and Donna Eulisi, pictured above, took the stage as the impressionable young lovers. Lisa Westerlund, Mark Harris, Trey Gwaltney and Lynda Wright, joined by Ray Walden, Kathryn Thornburg, Chris Small and Lucas Van Alen, did a fine job bringing this delightful musical to life.

Todd Olson, a graduate student at UNCG, directed the play. Musical direction was by Elon student Kevin Long.

Rich Named Associate Dean

Dr. William G. Rich has been named associate dean of academic affairs. He began his duties in March when the appointment was made.

Rich will work directly with Dr. Gerald Francis, dean of academic affairs. The two will share the responsibilites assigned to the area of academic affairs.

Describing his new duties, Rich commented that primarily the associate dean's position is a "people job" "I hope to maximize the strengths of a large number of people and direct those energies to meet students' needs," he said.

Rich joined the Elon College faculty in 1977 as assistant professor of religion. In 1982 he was named an associate professor and in 1986, professor. He has served several terms as chairman of the Department of Religion and as chairman of various faculty standing committees. He will retain his current responsibilities as director of general studies and director of the Study-Abroad Program; however, he will no longer be doing any classroom teaching.

Rich received a B.A. degree from Wake Forest University, a B.D. degree from Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary and a Ph.D. in religion from Emory University.

Faculty Approves New Major

The Elon faculty recently approved a new four-year medical technology major. The new major is being offered in response to many student requests, according to Dr. Chris White, vice president of academic and student affairs. Elon has offered a two-year medical laboratory technology program for some time.

In the new four-year program, which will begin in the fall of 1986, students will complete the first three years of work on the Elon campus. The fourth year will be spent at Moses Cone Hospital in Greensboro under a cooperative agreement between Elon College and the hospital. The degree, however, will be granted by Elon.

Elon also offers a B.S. degree in cytotechnology. The cytotechnology program has the same structure as the new medical technology program. Three years are spent on the Elon campus concentrating on the biological sciences and basic chemistry. The fourth year is a 12-month clinical internship provided through a cooperative agreement between Elon and Roche Biomedical Labs, Inc.

Bob Burton

New Basketball Coach Named

Bob Burton, former assistant coach and head recruiter for the University of Tennessee, has been named Elon's new men's head basketball coach.

Burton replaces Bill Morningstar who guided the Christians to a 99-103 record in seven years as head coach. Morningstar resigned to take the job as head of athletic fund raising as well as remaining as Elon's golf coach.

In announcing Burton's appointment, Dr. Alan White, college athletic director, noted that Burton was the college's unanimous choice out of over 200 applicants. White said of Burton: "He brings with him a vast knowledge of the game. He works hard in recruiting the best available talent and we feel he will be a valuable asset to our program."

Burton has been at UT under head coach Don DeVoe for the past eight years. He also worked with DeVoe as his assistant at the University of Wyoming for two years before going to Tennessee. In between, he worked for a year as an assistant to Carl Tacy at Wake Forest University.

Burton's tenure with the Volunteers of UT included two Southeastern Conference championships, five NCAA tournaments, two NIT tournaments and six seasons of 20 or more wins.

Burton received his bachelor of arts degree from Emory and Henry College and his master's degree from Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

Burton and his wife, Susan, have one son, Ryan, age seven.

Elon to Hold Tennis Camp For Youth

Elon will hold its first annual youth tennis camp this summer under the direction of new tennis coach, Tom Parham. Boys and girls ages 9-17 will be grouped according to ability for individual drills, doubles strategy, video tape instruction and more. There will be two camp sessions, June 15-20 and June 22-27.

Before coming to Elon, Parham coached at Atlantic Christian College for 20 years. His career includes nearly 300 team victories, two national team championships in the NAIA and 28 conference and district championships. Parham is the only active NAIA tennis coach with three national Coach-of-the-Year awards. He also has 15 years of tennis camp experience.

Enrollment for the camp will be limited. For more information, contact Parham at (919) 584-2252 or the Elon College athletic department.

Coach George Taylor discusses strategy with two club members.

Elon Lacrosse—Nine Years of Fun and Winning

By Bob Moser '86

"You have to be a little crazy, in a good way, to do it," Dr. George Taylor says of lacrosse. Taylor should know. He has served as advisor to Elon's Lacrosse Club since 1980.

The history of Elon lacrosse has been almost as hectic, crazy, and fast-paced as the sport itself, with a large measure of hard work and dedication mixed in.

Most Elon students had probably never heard of the sport when a group of freshmen from Charlottesville entered the college in 1974 and decided that they wanted to continue competing in their favorite high school sport. In 1976, Tim Moore '78 and Bernard "Bunny" Carr '78 decided to take action: they requested, and were granted, $500 by the Student Senate to form a lacrosse club.

$500, however, was not the sum of money needed to equip a new team and pay for travel costs. So Moore, Carr and a few others went to work, using the hall phone in Smith Dormitory to schedule games and inventing ways of obtaining the expensive equipment required for the club. The college donated some lacrosse equipment it had acquired from a bankrupt school in Virginia; parents, friends and lacrosse coaches at other colleges pitched in. The first game nets for the team had to be "borrowed" on a dark night from the Duke University field, Moore recalls. But, miraculously, the club was ready to compete in the spring of 1977 and won three games.

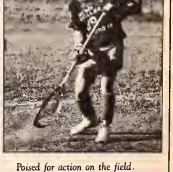
Though still without college financial support, the team is on much more solid ground today. Home games are well-attended, and interest in the sport has brought the number of players up to around 35 each year. The college has considered making lacrosse an officially funded sport, but for now the club "stays afloat" with $25-per-player dues, along with student government and parental support. The club supplemented an excellent 7-4 season last year with a strong showing again this spring, led by senior standouts such as Ken Markowsky, Mike Storck, Harry Watson and Pete Carlson. Taylor and his players believe that lacrosse at Elon could be a success on the intercollegiate level.

"The sport has grown tremendously in the state," Taylor says—and the numbers back him up. There are currently five high school teams, 12 college club teams, and five intercollegiate teams in North Carolina. The University of North Carolina team is one of the nation's best. Peter Farrell, a senior on Elon's club, believes that Elon is ready for intercollegiate lacrosse. "Lacrosse has already built up an impressive following here," he says, "and it can only grow. Elon attracts a lot of students from areas in the North where lacrosse is popular—and with a team we would 'attract even more."

The Elon Reptiles, as the team named itself, have had their ups and downs since the club was formed. The club probably had its best year in 1978, when a team that featured high school All-Americans Paul and "Skins" Jamme went 10-3 with one very big victory. The club's founding members fondly remember when they upset Georgia Tech at Grant Field in Atlanta before a large crowd in the stands and a local television audience.

Though victories like that have been scarce, Moore says that he and Carr are extremely proud of what they started. "We are very satisfied that something so important to us is still important to the players." Taylor, the advisor/coach, credits alumni like Scott Montgomery, Steve Burke, Ricky Crissman, Jay Knight, Chris McCaig, Don Fisher, Rob Haley and Steve Coor with keeping the team going through the years. He also believes that the team has become more competitive and dedicated to winning: "These guys are more serious—they really want to win," he says.

Still, the sport at Elon was built on fun. The tradition of post-game "around the tub" socials with opponents continues, and probably will, whether Elon lacrosse remains a winning club or becomes a winning team. And the players will likely remain, as Taylor calls them, "wild, but dedicated."



Poised for action on the field.

Alumni

Long Named Director of Alumni and Parent Relations

William G. Long, director of foundations and grants and former dean of student affairs at Elon, has been named director of alumni and parent relations.

Long holds B.A. and M.A. degrees from West Virginia University and earned an M.Div. degree in religion and higher education at Yale University. He served as dean of men at the University of North Carolina and dean of student affairs at Kalamazoo College before joining the Elon staff as dean of student affairs in 1974. Long, who is also an associate professor of political science, became director of foundations and grants in 1983.

Dr. Jo Watts Williams, vice president for development, stated that Long is well qualified for the position. "He has been with the college for 12 years and has been highly innovative and successful in all of his duties," she said. "We could not have a better person to direct such an important part of our college program."

"I am extremely enthusiastic about this new work," said Long, who estimates that he has worked with thousands of students and "taught hundreds" at Elon, and who worked with the parents council at Kalamazoo College. His goal as director, he said, will be to incorporate alumni and parents more fully into the college community. "We want alumni and parents to know that their views and insights are highly valued and that they are important in the formation of Elon College's future," he stated.

William G. Long

Long replaces Susie Bullard Sanford '79, who recently accepted a position in the accounting office at Elon.

Alumni Gather in Charlotte

On Friday night, April 11, about 50 Elon alumni and friends enjoyed the sounds of the Emanons at the annual Greater Charlotte Area Alumni Chapter dance. The gathering was held at Charlotte's Myers Park Country Club and featured the final performance of the Emanons under Dr. Jack White, who retires this spring after 23 years of directing the group. Stan Butler '78, president of the Greater Charlotte Chapter, and his wife, Martha '77, organized the event, along with Nancy and Bill '40 Stewart, Elizabeth and Dale '68 Morrison, Woody Wilson '38, Jeanne '45 and Dan '48 Harrell, Sandy '80 and Clay Lemons and Lib and Bob '44 Johnston. W.E. "Buster" Butler '44 and his wife, Mary '49, were special out-of-town guests of the Charlotte Chapter. College staff members in attendance were Dr. Jo Watts Williams '55, vice president for development, with her husband, Bill '50, and Susie Bullard Sanford '79, director of alumni and parent programs.

A New Approach to Career Day Brings Alumni to Campus

Eight alumni returned to Elon in March to share their experiences as career professionals in what proved to be a successful new approach to the traditional career day program.

Instead of having a career day fair, with students dropping by to talk to alumni stationed in a central location, the alumni visited specific classes and spoke informally about their careers. Some of the topics they addressed were how they chose their career areas, how they got their first job, and what a typical work day is like. They also talked about the rewards and frustrations of their work and the academic preparation necessary for their particular career.

Bryant Colson, a 1980 graduate majoring in political science, is currently a branch operations manager for Wachovia Bank. He visited economics, business administration, political science and English classes.

Physical education majors Young Mitchell '79, a sergeant with the N.C. Department of Corrections, Andria McDowell Smith '70, a teacher-coach at East Davidson High School, and Dean Coleman '69, director of the Alamance County Recreation Department, teamed up to visit the physical education department.

Speaking to the human services department were Drew Van Horn '82, state program director for the Fellowship of Christian Athletes; Sandra Reid '85, juvenile court counselor; Greg Seel, a corporal with the crime prevention unit of the Burlington Police Department; and Suzanne Fischel, a reservation sales agent with Piedmont Airlines.

Branching out...

A moment of reflection near the entrance of Whitley Auditorium sparked the idea for a gift to Elon from Student Government President Shane Jones '86.

Jones chose to remember his collegiate roots by presenting the college with an oak tree—giving new life to the spot where the former senior oak once stood.

Shane Jones' '86 gift proves he was barking up the right tree.

Greek Alumni Weekend—A New Tradition

March 14-16 was a sunny weekend for the more than 200 alumni who joined their brothers and sisters on campus for the first annual Greek Alumni Weekend. Sponsored by the Elon College Greek Alumni Council, the weekend featured various activities for the alumni of each group. Alumni joined active fraternity and sorority members for basketball and softball games, mixers, cookouts and brunches during the three-day event.

Saturday evening about 100 Greek alumni from all organizations gathered for a picnic dinner at the Elon Lodge. The dinner was planned and organized by Lisa Guyton Melton '81, chairman of Greek Alumni Weekend, and Tim Moore '78, chairman of the Greek Alumni Council. "The dinner for all Greek alumni—and the entire weekend—were a great success," said Moore. "I believe that it will develop into a highlight of the year for all Greeks at Elon."

A number of college staff members were present at the picnic: Dr. Jo Watts Williams '55, vice president for development; Dr. Jerry Tolley, director of corporate and annual resources; Susie Bullard Sanford '79, director of alumni and parent programs; Scott Stevenson '80, admissions counselor; and Bob Moser '86, administrative assistant for development.

ELON COMPUTER HELPS STUDENTS DEFINE CAREER CHOICES

By Susan Klopman

What shall I study? What courses do I take? I like psychology, but what kind of job can I get? How do I know what career best suits me? The questions seem endless, and too often the answers aren't really answers; they seem more like accidents.

Elon College students are now using computers to find answers to the difficult, sometimes overwhelming, questions about choosing a career. The System of Interactive Guidance and Information, better known as SIGI, is a computer-based program designed to help students identify their values and interests and match them with career choices and opportunities. Elon is one of a handful of North Carolina colleges and universities who have purchased the highly acclaimed software.

Developed by Martin Katz of Educational Testing Service, the program leads the student through questions like: What do I want? What am I good at? What occupations might I like? Can I do what's required? The student selects various responses and the computer begins to put together a picture of the student and his suitability for certain occupations. He may discover career opportunities that he had never even considered. He can also begin to develop a clear plan of study that fits with his interests and values.

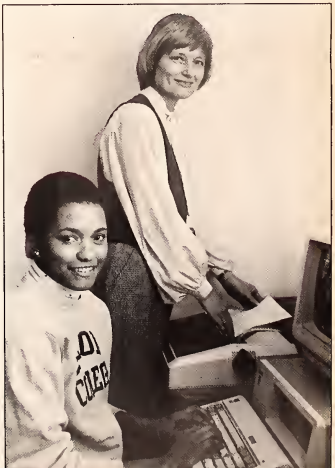
SIGI also contains information about 300 occupations. The data is based on national statistics and is updated annually. Betsey Savage, director of career planning, noted that in addition to containing the most up-to-date career information, "SIGI makes the information pertinent to the individual." She sees the program as a "translator." "It makes the connection between college study and careers," she said.

"Career planning is ideally a four-year program," Savage explained. "It should begin in the freshman year as a student seeks to define his values and interests and to identify his options. This leads to more intentional course selection and helps with the choice of a major. Finally SIGI identifies what and where the market is when the student is ready to enter."

Senior John Moorefield worked with SIGI to explore his interest in banking. "SIGI gave me a lot of information about a banking career, including the various positions, salary ranges and locations where the banking industry is growing most rapidly," he said. Later in one of his interviews with a bank, Moorefield presented the SIGI computer printout which indicated his educational background as well as his personal interests.

"I immediately got a second-level interview," he said. "I guess the banker was impressed with the 'homework' I'd done." So for Moorefield, SIGI not only enabled him to explore the world of banking from a practical standpoint, but it also helped him clarify and articulate his suitability for such a career.

Freshman Cassie McFarland has used SIGI as one part of Elon's career education program. "The whole program has helped me define some areas of interest. I have a better understanding of courses I need to pursue those interests."



Betsey Savage, director of career planning, guides Maria Martin through the SIGI computer program.

The zero investment theory at work

by Susan Klopman

Jack Utz and Jeff McKenzie became good friends during their Elon College days. Both played football and both belonged to Kappa Psi Nu (now Kappa Alpha). 1977 marked the year of their graduation. Utz majored in business; McKenzie in physical education.

Another common thread they discovered during those college days was their interest in business, particularly the screen printing business. It all began during Greek Week in the spring of '77.

Jeff McKenzie and Jack Utz

Classmate Les Hall '77 wanted some T-shirts printed for the occasion. McKenzie had done some screen printing during high school, so he got the job. With homemade equipment set up in the spare bedroom at Utz's home, the two men turned out the first screen-printed apparel that was eventually to become the trademark of Mr. J's Silkscreen Printing, Inc. of Burlington.

"We really began with almost a 'hobbyish' attitude," McKenzie remembered. "By 1978 we had filled Jack's spare bedroom with equipment. The paint smell was awful, so we decided we needed to find a better place to work."

"We had no money. We started with zero investment," Utz added. "We took our homemade equipment—frames and presses—and rented the little building across the street," he said, pointing to a brown building on East Webb Avenue in Burlington that is not nearly as large as their present facilities.

"The next task was to 'find business,'" McKenzie laughed. "We were able to get some T-shirts on credit through the mother of one of our college friends. As we sold the shirts, we were able to pay our bills. That's the way it went for the first two or three years."

During the third year, the two began to make a little money for themselves. Each year since then, sales have surpassed the previous year. Business is definitely growing.

Now Mr. J's Silkscreen Printing, Inc. has warehouse and printing facilities under one roof. Inventory ranges from 2,000 to 4,000 dozen product items, which they now buy directly from the manufacturer. T-shirts are only part of the business. They can print almost anything. In fact, some of their recent work has including etching computer circuit boards. "We have just computerized our screen inventory," Utz said. "I think we have about 7,000 screens."

The business employs ten people, including two designers. "We aren't really an art design business," Utz said, "but if a customer comes in without a design, we can produce that for him too. The main thing we are interested in is turning out a top quality product that pleases the customer."

Significant among Mr. J's customers are Elon College and many of the friends the two men made while they were in school. "We have never had to do much paid advertising," McKenzie noted. "We get a lot of business just by word of mouth. Our products are the best ads."

Each year Mr. J's supplies the Elon football team with practice shirts and towels. The wrestling, tennis and basketball teams also use items printed at Mr. J's. Among the many alumni customers are Keith Hall '72, owner of T.K. Tripps restaurant chain, and country singer Joe West '74. West's logo, the Blue Cowboy, appears as a stunning print on the back of a jacket. Suppliers have included Royal Textile Mills, co-owned by Chip Atwater '77.

Utz and McKenzie serve as owners, managers and sales force for their business. "We have begun to train people to take over some of the specific responsibilities," McKenzie said. Despite the fact the two men have been the backbone of the organization, they credit their employees with the real success of the business. "Our employees really care about the work we do. They are here to see that our standards are met," Utz added.

Obviously meeting standards and producing top quality screen prints have been part of the secret to building this successful business. Another part seems to be the genuine friendship and compatibility that exist between McKenzie and Utz. It is a friendship that extends to off hours too. Both have families that they list as their number one interest. Utz's wife is the former Pat Detomo '76. They have two children: Bradley, 4, and Emily, 3. McKenzie and his wife, Julie, also have two children: Chad, 4, and Jennabeth, 1. When not with their families or at work, Utz and McKenzie are often out hunting or playing racquetball—in screen printed T-shirts, of course.

On the Leading Edge of Aviation History

By Susan Klopman

"Airwolf" fans know they are looking at the future of aviation as they watch the sleek black jet-powered helicopter dart across the television screen on Saturday night. In only a few seconds, this amazing craft slowly rises from the depths of its cavernous hangar then rips through the sky with jet engines whining.

To the technical eye, Airwolf is a combination of advanced composites, vertical lift and forward thrust. So is Bell Helicopter's amazing new aircraft with tilt-rotor engines. If none of that makes sense, just ask Elon alumnus Elias J. (Lee) Shahwan '74, senior engineer for advanced composites at Bell Helicopter Textron, Fort Worth, Texas. Somehow he makes it all sound simple, or at least understandable.

Shahwan is a senior engineer at work on the leading edge of aviation history. He is in charge of advanced composites materials and process selection for the tilt-rotor airplane. He also reviews and approves the drawings, material and process specifications for the V-22 Osprey, the military version of the tilt-rotor aircraft.

What are these advanced composites? And what is a tilt-rotor aircraft? Advanced composites are basically lightweight, nonmetallic material systems. They are composed of a high strength fiber embedded in plastic or some other common matrix. While that definition probably conjures up visions of highly sophisticated aerospace components, most of us have actually handled advanced composites when we pick up a new tennis racket, golf club or fishing rod. Advanced composites are replacing aluminum and steel in many product designs. Lightweight and strong, advanced composites are replacing some of the traditional materials used in airplane construction.

In flight, the tilt-rotor aircraft looks like any other small plane. Its style of landing sets it apart. As the plane approaches the airport, the propellers rotate upward, allowing the plane to land like a helicopter. "The concept of changing a helicopter to a helicopter-airplane is about 20 years old," Shahwan said. Development has been prolonged because of the complexity of the tilt-rotor itself and the fact that it uses structures never used before, according to Shahwan.

What brought Shahwan and the tilt-rotor together? Actually the roots of the association lead all the way back to Elon. Shahwan majored in chemistry, an essential for knowledge of composites construction. Specific study at N.C. State University led to the M.S. degree in materials engineering, with a minor in mechanical engineering. With this background, in 1978 he was recruited by Boeing Commercial Airplane Company. Recruitment did not stop there. In 1983 while working on a Boeing project with Bell Helicopter, he was offered a position with Bell. Acceptance meant moving his wife, Donna Knott '76, and three children, Jamie, 5, Gabriel, 3½, and Paul, 1, from the mountains of Washington state to the flatlands of Texas.

Shahwan is excited about his work. "It is a great feeling to work on a project from the conceptual idea to the actual hardware that will be flying," he said. "In the future, helicopters and small airplanes will convert to this tilt-rotor because of its versatility."

Shahwan is making history. Exactly what shape the history will take is left to the future. Airports will be the place to look. Spot-landing pads may eventually replace miles of concrete runways. The demands on airports could be greatly reduced, according to Shahwan and the other experts.

Imagine boarding a quiet, comfortable, 36-seat tilt-rotor aircraft to commute between New York's Kennedy International and LaGuardia airports. The New York Port Authority is so interested in the possibility that it is spending $230,000 to study how the aircraft can be used to reduce airport congestion. Congress is investing too. It has earmarked $584 million in the Pentagon's budget for continued development of the tilt-rotor aircraft.

Although Shahwan's investment in this wonder plane will probably never be counted in dollars, no doubt it will offer him a wealth of satisfaction to know he played a major role in aviation history.

Estate Planning:
An Investment in Tomorrow

MAKING YOUR WILL

Part II

The story goes that Howard Hughes left a financial empire valued at more than $2 billion when he died. But he apparently did not leave a will. A large number of wills, purportedly made by Hughes, have been brought forward, but none has been allowed as valid. According to most reports, two-thirds or more of adult Americans, like Hughes, die without wills (intestate).

The one unanimous recommendation you will get from your attorney, accountant, bank trust officer, and other estate planners is that you should prepare a valid will. Making a will is not only the exercising of a basic American right but also the only way you can be sure that your property will be distributed according to your wishes after your death. If you die intestate (without a will), a probate court will parcel out your property according to the intestacy laws of your state, without regard to any preferences you may have had.

A will enables you to accomplish a number of other important objectives, in addition to having your estate distributed as you wish. With a valid will you can:

1. Make settlement of your estate as trouble-free and smooth as possible, ensuring against family conflicts or litigation.
2. Avoid unnecessary taxes, legal fees, and administrative costs.
3. Transfer much or all of your estate to your beneficiaries without going through the probate procedure.
4. Name a qualified executor and, if it seems wise, an alternate executor in case the executor cannot or will not serve.
5. Name a guardian if you have minor children, in case your spouse does not survive you.
6. Guard against lack of management experience or competence in investing on the part of your spouse, children, or other beneficiaries by setting up life income plans or other special arrangements, with competent management assured.
7. Establish one or more trusts for the benefit of your spouse, children, or other beneficiaries and name a competent trustee for each trust that is established.
8. Make gifts of appreciation to friends.
9. Secure "the benefits which flow from wealth" and extend your influence beyond your own lifetime through bequests to causes and institutions which you have loved and believed in.

The particular objectives which an individual wants to achieve by writing a will are likely to vary according to his or her wishes, family circumstances, the thoroughness with which plans for the will have been made, the size and complexity of the estate, the number and kinds of bequests, whether trusts have been created, and the advice received from the attorney and other advisers. For instance, a testator (one who has made a legally valid will) who has a mentally handicapped son or daughter has had a focal concern in writing a will that someone with normal children, or no children at all, would not have had. Or a testator whose spouse has been a fully active partner in the family business has probably had a different outlook than another whose spouse has had no experience, or possibly not even personal interest, in managing assets or making investments.

One possible objective in writing a will—one which was not listed before and is too seldom discussed—is disinheritance. You may not disinherit your spouse completely, but you are generally not required to leave your property to anyone else, even children. Among children, you may have reasons other than your own likes or dislikes for preferring one over another, such as the one with greatest need over another who has acquired substantial wealth of his own; or one who has been lovingly attentive to parents over one who has paid little or no attention to them.

If disinheritance is one of your objectives, be sure to have your attorney pay particular attention to how this is written into the will. In the case of children, it is probably wise to mention their names and tactfully state the reason for the disinheritance. From a legal standpoint, this will show that you have not left them out by mistake or through oversight. It may also protect against later claims of undue influence, lack of capacity to make a will, or fraud. The point here is not one of justification of what you have decided but of validating your will. Also, be sure that all of your property is disposed of by your will. Your attorney can take care of this with a residuary clause.

Should your spouse have a will? Most definitely. Your spouse should have a will for many if not most of the same reasons you need a will. If you are a man and your wife is the same age as you, the odds are about three to two that she will outlive you. Your estate planning should take these odds into account. If she does outlive you, she will have her own estate, plus what she inherits from you, to take care of and pass on in accordance with her wishes. But what if she does not outlive you? What about the possibility of simultaneous death? What tax implications need to be kept in mind?

Your attorney's answers to these questions will likely substantiate the need for each spouse to have an individual will. Joint, mutual, and reciprocal wills are generally undesirable and likely to cause unnecessary problems.

More women than men die intestate. This suggests that many women have either felt that wills were unnecessary, or decided that they did not own enough to justify making wills, or thought that only those women who were widows should make wills. Women now own and control much of the wealth in this country. What happens if a woman puts off making a will until she becomes incompetent? What happens if a man and wife are in a common disaster and she survives him briefly but then dies? Ask your attorney these questions.

PROCRASTINATION IS THE ENEMY

Your will should be made now. You need a will now to take care of present and foreseeable needs. If you put it off, it may never get done. In particular, older persons who do not have wills should make them while they have the physical, mental, and emotional energy and alertness to think clearly, know their own minds, and attend to the details of planning and executing their wills. They run a greater risk of waiting too long, of becoming incompetent, or of being unduly influenced by others.

WHAT DO YOU NEED TO DO?

Do you need an attorney to prepare your will? The answer to that is yes. Even for a simple will, an attorney can make sure the will is in good legal form and is complete. For such a will, the fee will be modest. You can find out what the fee will be ahead of time.

If your estate is extensive and the objectives for your will are complex, you and your attorney may need advice from a tax accountant, a trust officer, or other advisers in order to prevent tax erosion of your estate, guard against legal problems which could arise during the probate and settlement procedures, and provide for proper management of estate assets during the settlement process and of any trusts which have been established by the will.

When you create a trust, you turn property over to a qualified trustee to be held and managed for the benefit of one or more other persons or institutions. Why would you want to establish a testamentary trust (a trust established by your will)?

1. A trust may save taxes for your estate, for your spouse's estate, or for the estates of other beneficiaries of your will.
2. A trust can protect against the immaturity, inexperience, or incompetence of your heirs or named beneficiaries by turning over the management of your property to a qualified trustee.
3. A trust can protect your spouse or other beneficiaries by assuring them of an income for life, including invasion of principal if necessary, while still passing on the remaining principal to your favorite charitable institution.
4. A trust is an astonishingly flexible and legal way to pass on advantages of your estate to loved ones while protecting the assets and providing for their final disposition.

An attorney who is experienced in the use of trusts can advise you whether you should make use of a trust and, if so, what kind of trust you should create. And even though we have been dealing here with trusts created by will, the information given is generally applicable to inter vivos trusts (living trusts or trusts created by you during your lifetime).

You can reduce the cost of making your will by being prepared when you go to see your attorney. Think about your objectives. Write them out on paper, then revise and rewrite them. When you go to your attorney be prepared to explain what you want to do. The better prepared you are, the less of the attorney's time will be required and the lower your cost will be.

Your lawyer will need to know all the pertinent facts concerning your property and personal information about you, your family, and your intended beneficiaries. He or she will need to know about your plans for charitable bequests, including charitable remainder interests in any trusts you may establish.

The most effective way for you to supply the information your lawyer will need is to prepare a memorandum of your personal affairs. Once prepared, this memorandum can be duplicated, and copies of it can be supplied not only to your attorney but to your spouse, the executor you have named in your will, and any other trusted person who might be of help in an emergency. In addition to helping your attorney understand what is involved in the drafting of your will and informing your executor, spouse, or others who will have responsibilities for administering your estate, thorough preparation of this sort will show that you know and understand the nature and extent of your property, which is one of the indications that you have the physical and mental capacity to execute a valid will.

To be sure that you are preparing all of the information needed for these purposes, write to Planned Giving Office, Campus Box 2116, Elon College, N.C. 27244 and ask for "A Record of the Personal Affairs of (your name)." We will send you a free booklet which has been specially designed to bring together the kind of information needed in preparing your will and in administering your estate. This information will conserve your attorney's time, reduce the cost of preparing your will, and help to insure that your will is tailor-made for your purposes.

WHEN DO YOU NEED TO CHANGE YOUR WILL?

No matter how careful you and your attorney have been in preparing your will, you will need to be alert to changes in your situation which call for a reassessment of your will. A good rule might be, even when no major changes have occurred, to review your will every three years to be sure it is still up-to-date. In addition to the three-year review, you should rethink your will when major changes take place. Among the changes calling for review are these:

1. You have changed your mind about one or more provisions in your will.
2. You have married, separated, divorced, or remarried since your will was made.
3. Children or grandchildren have been born or adopted.
4. Children or grandchildren have changed their marital status.
5. You have changed your life insurance program, disposed of property, or acquired new property through purchase or inheritance.
6. A beneficiary of your will has died or had a change in status which causes you to want to review the bequest.
7. You have suffered serious financial losses.
8. The executor, alternate executor, or guardian has died or is no longer able or willing to serve.
9. You have moved to another state or acquired real property in another state.
10. The tax laws have changed in a way to make a review of your will advisable.
11. Your family relationships, friendships, or charitable interests have changed.

You can make a simple change in your will by the addition of a codicil (amendment). However, when you want to make major changes, it is better to revise and rewrite the will. As in the case of the initial will, you should have your attorney write the final draft of a codicil or of a completely revised will. The assurance that your will is in the best legal form, carefully designed to hold up during probate and the settlement process, is well worth what your attorney will charge you.

HOW TO INCLUDE ELON IN YOUR WILL

Bequests (gifts by will) have become a significant part of the charitable income Elon College receives. A will gift to Elon may save taxes for your estate. Also, giving to Elon by will allows you to keep control of assets as long as you live and, by establishing a trust, as long as your spouse or any other income beneficiary lives. This enables you to protect your own financial security and look after loved ones, while ultimately making a substantial gift to Elon College.

Your bequest to Elon can be an outright gift of money, securities, real estate, or personal property. It can be stated as a specific sum, a percent of the net estate, all or part of the residue, specified property, or any combination of these. Or Elon College can be made the beneficiary of a testamentary trust.

Before you have your will written, write or call the Elon College planned giving officer and arrange to discuss how your will gift can best be made. If you want to be sure that your bequest is used for a particular purpose, discuss with the planned giving officer how this can be done without causing institutional problems in the future. Then your lawyer can draft your will in accordance with your plans and in a form suited to the laws of your state.

LIFETIME GIFTS AS A PART OF ESTATE PLANNING

You can reduce estate taxes and probate costs by making gifts to Elon College during your lifetime. Lifetime gifts are not included in your estate for probate or estate tax purposes. You can avoid capital gains tax on gifts of appreciated property, and all gifts to Elon qualify for income tax charitable deductions at the time the gifts are made.

Elon College life income plans provide opportunities for you to support the college while qualifying for tax benefits and supplementing your retirement income or providing life income for your spouse or other designated beneficiary. One of these life income plans might well fit into your overall tax and estate planning.

Another remarkable charitable gift technique allows you to give a home (including a "second" or vacation home, condominium, or apartment) or a farm to Elon College, take a substantial charitable tax deduction now, and still retain lifetime rights to the control and use of the property. This method of giving has some advantages over giving the same property by will. The property is ultimately transferred to the college without being subject to probate costs or estate taxes. You get an income tax deduction now and can experience the satisfaction of making the gift during your lifetime.

LET US HEAR FROM YOU

This information has been prepared and distributed as a service to alumni, alumnae, and other friends of Elon College. We hope it has served a useful purpose in raising the level of awareness concerning the need for estate planning, in focusing on the fundamental areas where planning is most needed, and in emphasizing the basic essential of making a valid will. We also hope that you will want to keep this booklet as a handy source of information and a ready reference.

Each of you will have your own questions and concerns after reading this booklet. Please call on us for additional information. We are available to work with you, your attorney, and other advisers.

Isabella Cannon and the Honorable Thad Eure, chairman of the Elon College Board of Trustees, were featured recently in a Raleigh News and Observer article about grown-up security blankets. The Linus-and-his-blanket image speaks clearly to all adults who feel lost without a special object, habit or routine.

Mrs. Cannon is not a blanket carrier; she is a collector of tennis shoes—all kinds and sizes. The former mayor of Raleigh noted, "I'm always known as the little old lady in tennis shoes." She's not always tied into tennis shoes, but she does wear them for walking, jogging or working in the yard—just enough to keep the image alive. Actually she is just keeping up with the younger generation. Living near an elementary school and NC State University provides her with lots of data on current shoe trends. "I see hundreds of students go by everyday," she said. "What are they wearing? They're wearing tennis shoes."

Eure, NC's secretary of state for the past 50 years, has several trademarks—a wide red bow tie, a straw boater hat for the summer months, and for all seasons, a signature in green ink. "Before felt-tip pens came into vogue, I had used five gallons of green ink—that would be about enough to turn North Carolina green," Eure said. That's probably not an exaggeration since he has signed papers and documents for 13 N.C. governors over the years!

Howard W. "Doc" Fite has had baseball in his blood for years. At Elon he played for one year under Coach "Peahead" Walker, but at home in Lexington, N.C., he lived baseball day and night with his father, "Pops" Fite, who helped bring professional baseball to their hometown in 1937.

Fite had always planned to turn the family baseball memorabilia into a scrapbook, but there was just too much. The scrapbook became a book entitled Four Indian Summers, and in it, Fite has captured Lexington baseball history from 1937-1940.

Before adding authorship to his list of credentials, Fite has been an active community leader in Lexington. He is a former president and board member of the YMCA, a former member of the school board, and the recipient of the 1965 Lexington Distinguished Citizen Award.

Fite retired in 1983. He and his wife, Betty, enjoy traveling and gardening when he's not watching guess what!

Theo Strum, chairman of the department of education and psychology at Campbell University, has been named dean of the school of education. Dr. Strum was appointed to the position because of previous experience and dedication to the department. Prior to going to Campbell in 1976, Strum served as academic dean of Elon College. She has also been a high school teacher, public school administrator and visiting professor at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. A native of Roxboro, Strum earned an M.Ed. at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro and a Ph.D. from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Dr. Wayne T. Moore recently returned to Burlington to perform an organ recital at First Presbyterian Church. Moore has been a professor at Auburn University for the past twenty years and is a frequent recitalist in that area. In March he gave a recital at the Cathedral of St. Philip in Atlanta. He also serves as organist at First United Methodist Church in West Point, Ga.

"Country" Gorman Is One of the Best

On a Sunday in February, there was a reception in Atlanta in tribute to Oscar Banks "Country" Gorman '22. American Humanics, Inc. presented Gorman with the Trustee for Life Award. Country is one of only four leaders to receive this distinguished honor.

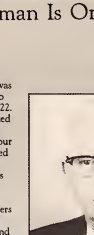
American Humanics, Inc. serves the Boy Scouts and ten affiliated agencies with programs to prepare young people for professional careers in youth service. Gorman helped found the organization in 1948 and has previously received the Founders Award for his 40 years of work.

"It's hard for me to believe that it has been my good fortune to have the people of Atlanta and this area give me a place in their hearts," Gorman wrote recently to his longtime friend "Foots" Fesmire '24.

As "Country" wrote to "Foots": "Most people fight nicknames. You and I had the good sense to utilize ours . . . Life has been good to you and me. Most of mine I would gladly live over. Life has been for you as for me, 'an enjoyable journey.'"

Born in 1899 in Carbarrus County, North Carolina, Gorman's journey has been distinguished by service in many areas. Civic clubs and many national organizations have honored him. Among the awards have been Man of the Year awards from both Civitan and Rotary clubs and the Fifty Year Service Award from the Atlanta Rotary Club. He has also been elected an Honorary Board Member for Life at St. Mark's United Methodist Church.

In a wonderful moment in his letter, Gorman wrote: "My wife says there is a saying among actors—



'you better get off the stage before you get the hook!' She informs me that I am supposed to be retired since 1964."

Retirement has not lulled Gorman into less activity; in fact, it has added some new dimensions to his life. As Gorman wrote, retirement now also means he has three jobs for which he is "totally unqualified!" The first is cook: "As an old Boy Scout, I am trying to learn indoor cooking." Second is housekeeper and "I am rated at the bottom," he confessed. Third is nurse and "I am 100 percent inept," he added.

In closing, Gorman conveyed to Fesmire the hope that the two of them "can visit dear old Elon together. They have made a lot of progress since we left," he said. A lot has changed at Elon since 1922, but a tradition of outstanding community service by alumni like "Country" Gorman is one thing that has remained constant.

After several years in Marosa, Cameroon, Ken Hollingsworth, his wife, Judy, and their three children, Nathan, Anne and Carrie, are rapidly adapting to American culture once again. Their furlough in Randleman, N.C., will end in June, however, and back to Cameroon they go for another four years. Ken is a missionary with Wycliffe Bible Translators, Inc.

Though their time in the States has introduced them to the wonders of He-Man, Oo-Boos, Cabbage Patch dolls and McDonalds, it has been primarily filled with activities related to their return to Cameroon. Ken took a French course and a Bible course, received a long-awaited computer (which he will operate on solar power in Cameroon), and has been seeking funds ($8,000) for a new truck they ordered to be bought in Cameroon.

Local speaking engagements and trips to Kentucky, New Jersey and Washington, D.C., interspersed with buying and packing supplies for the next four years, will be crowded in before their departure.

Despite the staggering pace, the Hollingsworths took time to send their good cheer and thanks to all their friends at Elon.

Tax season presents problems for virtually everyone, but some stay busier than others. One whose work is seemingly never slow is Gerelene Walker, who has her own accounting firm in Tarboro, N.C. She was recently featured in a Tarboro Daily Southerner article on certified public accountants' most hectic time of the year.

Walker started her practice after studying accounting at Elon and receiving her master's degree from East Carolina University. Although she had originally intended to major in home economics at Elon, the switch proved to be a wise one. Success for Walker has been quick, though sometimes difficult — especially during the grueling months of tax season.

"You have to put everything into it. This time of year, you have to be able to take pressure and be committed. It's not 9 to 5 work."

Smithwick Develops a Taste for Retirement

When Robert B. (Bob) Smithwick '52 retired from his position as a vice president of Texaco USA two years ago, he and wife Faye '52 vowed that they would never move again. After all, his various duties with Texaco over the years had caused them to move 19 times in 30 years, living in houses for as little as five days. Bob and Faye probably thought when they settled in his native Hampton Roads, Va., that he would also remain retired.

But though Norfolk is entirely to Bob Smithwick's liking, retirement was not. So, at age 58, he has taken on a new challenge, accepting the position of director of development for the city of Norfolk. He was selected over 65 applicants for the job, which he looks at with characteristic enthusiasm. "Norfolk has a great deal to offer," he says, and he intends to attract business to the seaside city by using its considerable resources.

Smithwick began his move up the corporate ladder at Texaco after his graduation from Elon in 1952 and later graduate studies in business at the University of Virginia. He joined Texaco in 1953 after working as a teacher and athletic coach in Guilford County. Moving from salesman to general sales manager of the marketing department to vice president in charge of personnel, labor and public relations was a long road for him, one that took him to hundreds of foreign countries and numerous cities. When he settled back into Norfolk upon retirement in 1983, he became an executive financial consultant, served on the board of Stewart Sandwiches, Inc. and dabbled in building projects. He was also a guest lecturer at Old Dominion University. Smithwick serves on the Presidential Board of Advisers at Elon as well as the advisory board for Virginia Wesleyan College.

Bob Smithwick's business expertise and love for the city should make the Norfolk development post a perfect match for his talents. Certainly he will make his mark in Norfolk, as he did at Texaco—even if he does eventually decide to settle into a life of leisure for good.

Tapscott '60 Goes to Head of the Class

In her 25 years as an educator, Barbara McCauley Tapscott has done everything from teach verb conjugations to develop statewide curriculum guidelines.

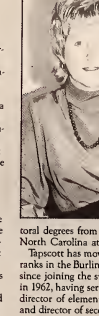
She began her career in 1960 as a brand new Elon graduate teaching English, French and biology in Alamance County's Pleasant Grove High School. Today she is assistant superintendent of instruction for the Burlington City Schools and the newly elected vice chairman of the North Carolina State Board of Education.

Tapscott was first appointed to the 13-member state board in 1981. The board is responsible for setting educational policy for the state's public schools.

As vice chairman Tapscott replaces Mebane M. Pritchett, executive director of the John Motley Morehead Foundation, who was elected chairman. Pritchett fills the position held by C.D. Spangler Jr., new president of the University of North Carolina system.

The new responsibility will mean regular trips to Raleigh for Tapscott to attend the board's monthly two-day meetings. The largest current project for the group is their Basic Education Plan, an eight-year plan designed to define class size, standardize the level of instruction and generally enhance quality in the state's public schools. The Career Ladder program, Quality Assurance in Teacher Education, and school system merger issue are other concerns.

Tapscott received her A.B. degree in English from Elon in 1960. She has also received master's and doctoral degrees from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.



Tapscott has moved steadily up the ranks in the Burlington City Schools since joining the system as a teacher in 1962, having served as a principal, director of elementary education and director of secondary education. In 1985 she was named assistant superintendent for instruction.

In recent years Tapscott has assisted in planning and implementing a number of major projects for the Burlington City Schools which have received wide attention and adoption. The Accountability in Primary Reading Program, which she helped to write and direct, went on to become a statewide reading program. Another program, the Right to Write, is also widely acclaimed. She is also a past chairperson of the North Carolina Competency Test Commission.

Schumacher Aces State CPA Exam

By Sue Brooks

Elizabeth Schumacher kept her nose in a book for 11 weeks.

"I did nothing but study," the Greensboro woman said about the time she spent cramming for the state CPA exam.

It was time well spent. Schumacher of 1817 Dunleith Way has just found out she made the top score on the test given in November 1985.

"You are not only in an elite group of 4.6 percent who passed all four parts, but you also made the highest grade of all North Carolina candidates who attempted the examination," the N.C. State Board of CPA Examiners told her in a congratulatory letter. The North Carolina CPA Foundation, Inc., then gave Schumacher its Katherine Outhrie Gold Medal Award, which she received March 22 in Charlotte.

Schumacher, 33, a supervisor in financial planning for AT&T's Purchasing and Transportation Organization, said the Lambers CPA review course, an 11-week commercial course she took at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro, helped her tremendously.

The relatively short, intensive review helps people pull together all they've learned throughout their college years, she said. However to make the course count, "you've got to be willing to give up a lot of personal time," Schumacher said.

The test itself is a two-and-a-half day ordeal. "By the time Friday comes around, you're just ready to have a drink and go home," Schumacher said.

She scored an average of 94.2 on the four parts of the exam. The series of tests is given twice a year by the state board. All states give the same test.

Schumacher graduated from Elon College in 1974 with a double major in accounting and business administration.

"Back when I had to make a decision about what I was going to do, I read an article in the newspaper saying that there were a lot of jobs in accounting," Schumacher said. "That's really what made me decide to go into accounting."

She has worked for AT&T at the Guilford Center on Mount Hope Church Road seven years, and plans to continue there for the foreseeable future, she said. Before working at AT&T she was with Robertson Neal & Co., a Greensboro CPA firm.

The state CPA exam is offered twice a year, and about 1,350 people take it each time, said Nancy Moore, coordinator of examinations for the state board. Of the 1,346 people who took the exam in November, 268 passed, Moore said. However, only 61 of those 268 passed all four parts of the test on their first try. The other 207 people passed one or more parts they had previously failed.

"So Mrs. Schumacher was in a very elite group," Moore said.

The Reverend Laurinda (Laurie) Hafner '76 is pastor of the Lakewood Congregational United Church of Christ in Lakewood, Ohio. After receiving the BA degree in political science at Elon, she attended Christian Theological Seminary in Indianapolis and was awarded the master of divinity degree in 1979. In June of this year she will receive a doctorate in divinity from McCormick's Theological Seminary in Chicago.

For the past seven years Hafner has been in her present position at Lakewood, which she loves. Two years ago she married Rick Walters, an attorney. Between commuting to Chicago to school and working full time, she enjoys running, tennis, photography and politics—still an avid interest.

Hafner and her husband live at 3387 W. 51st St., Cleveland, Ohio 44111.

Donald B. Johnson

When Don Johnson graduated from Elon in 1957, he was president of the senior class. Now he runs an entire school as principal of Weldon Elementary in Weldon, N.C.

His career, including becoming a student again to earn an M.Ed. degree from East Carolina University in 1966, has involved classroom teaching and coaching almost every sport imaginable. In 1967 he coached the East-West All-Star football game with fellow Elon grad Whitney Bradham '57. Moving into administrative duties in 1976 brought an end to coaching days, but never to the memories. Johnson currently enjoys hunting and fishing.

Johnson and his wife, Isadora, whom he married in 1961, have three children. Chris is a sophomore at East Carolina, Al is a senior at North County High School East, and Donna is in the 8th grade in Weldon.

The Johnson's mailing address is: Post Office Box 265, Jackson, N.C. 27845.

Ernestine Bridges Bishop

Ernestine Bishop '54 majored in English and French at Elon and also served as the senior class secretary. In 1959 she received a master's degree in education from Appalachian. Since then she has been in the classroom teaching English, either at the high school or college level. She is currently a part-time teacher at Central Piedmont Community College, an affiliation that began about 18 years ago.

Bishop returned to Elon for her 25th reunion in 1979 and enjoyed seeing her former roommate and wedding attendant, Mary Lee Farlow '54.

Reading is her favorite pastime, with some needlework and crossword puzzles worked in between. She is also active in the women's group at Grace United Methodist Church in Charlotte.

Ernestine and her husband, Hayes, who works for Celanese, have one daughter, Sheila, a sophomore at the University of North Carolina Charlotte.

The Bishops live at 822 Silverleaf Road, Charlotte, N.C. 28210.

FACULTY

Manley Wade Wellman, one of the state's most prolific authors and a former faculty member at Elon during the 60s, died April 5. He was 83.

Wellman was the author of more than 50 books and 500 short stories. He was best known for two books — Dead and Gone: Classic Crimes of North Carolina, a collection of 10 classic North Carolina crimes published in 1955, and Kingdom of Madison, a colorful history of Madison County published in 1973.

John H. Brasher, a retired Appalachian State University professor of economics, died April 7. Prof. Brasher was chairman of the department and professor of business administration at Elon in 1956.

Trustees Emeriti Gordon and Powell Die

In early May Elon College lost two distinguished trustees emeriti, Clyde W. Gordon of Burlington, N.C., died suddenly at his home on May 4. Rex G. Powell of Fuquay-Varina, N.C., died on May 3 after a grave illness of several weeks.

"Elon College is saddened by the loss of two very fine members of our college family," noted President Fred Young. "Both of these men gave a great deal of time to this college. Always thinking far ahead, they were completely committed to our work here."

Gordon was a graduate of Elon and served on the Board of Trustees from 1943 until 1972, filling the position of secretary for many of those years. His active leadership on the board also included membership on the executive and finance committees. In 1974 he was named "Outstanding Alumnus of Elon College" and was awarded an honorary doctor of commercial science degree in 1978.

Gordon's outstanding service to the college was representative of his involvement in business and community activities. After many years in the textile business, he served as chairman of the board of Pine Chemical, Inc. and vice president, secretary and treasurer of Comer-Gordon, Inc.

He served on many regional and local boards and was honored several times as "Man of the Year" by civic and professional organizations. Gordon was also a very active member of the First Christian United Church of Christ.

Gordon is survived by his son, Clyde W. Gordon Jr., and daughter, Patricia Jennings, both of Burlington. Gordon and his family recently gave the college a gift to help construct the fine arts center. In recognition of the gift, the lake on Elon's north campus has been named Lake Mary Nell in honor of Gordon's granddaughter Mary Nell Jennings.

Dr. Rex G. Powell was an active member of the Board of Trustees for 28 years before becoming a trustee emeritus in March 1985. He too served on the executive and finance committee for many years. Elon awarded Powell an honorary D.C.S. degree in 1979.

Powell's successful business career was varied. He owned several automobile dealerships, a building supply company, and later was involved in the banking and insurance industry.

His civic activities extended to the state as well as the local level. Serving on regional planning commissions, as mayor of Fuquay-Varina, and being honored as "Citizen of the Year" by his local Chamber of Commerce were only a few of his many distinctions.

Powell was an active member of the Wake Chapel Christian Church of the United Church of Christ. In 1984 Powell established the Wake Chapel Christian Church Scholarship Fund at Elon.

Powell is survived by his widow, the former Ina Mae Byrd, and two daughters, Melinda P. Suttenfield and Elizabeth P. Conrad.

Mary Graham Mackintosh '24 Passes Away

Mary Graham Lawrence Mackintosh of Elon College died suddenly at her home on May 1. She was the daughter of Annie Graham and Walter Phalit Lawrence, 1893 and 1894 graduates and faculty members of Elon College. Her husband was the Reverend Thomas Harold Mackintosh.

Mackintosh's family is well known to Elon historians. Her mother was a graduate of Graham and Elon colleges and an instructor at Elon. For several years before her death in 1969, she was the oldest living alumna of the college.

Dr. Lawrence was a professor of English from 1898 until 1926. His service to Elon encompassed many areas, including dean of the college. In 1921 he was elected to the lower house of the N.C. General Assembly — the first and only time a faculty member of the college has been elected to the legislative body.

Growing up as a faculty child provided Mackintosh with many memories. It was her family that was first notified by a student frantically banging on their front door on January 18, 1923, yelling: "Dr. Lawrence, the college is on fire!" The Main (Administration) Building was aflame.

As a college student here, her career was distinguished by earning the title of Valedictorian of the Class of 1924. She then attended the New England Conservatory of Music in preparation for her many years as a piano teacher.

Mackintosh always played an active role in the life of the college and recently shared her memories in an oral history recorded by the McEwen Library. She was serving on the college's Centennial Planning Committee at the time of her death.

She is survived by one brother, W. Phalit Lawrence Jr. of Hamilton, Ohio.

The Way We Were

Russell Gill Receives 1986-87 Daniels-Danieley Award

Each spring a special committee of students, senior faculty members and educators from outside the college gather to evaluate nominations for the Daniels-Danieley Award for Excellence in Teaching. Established in 1972 by former president James Earl Danieley and his wife, Verona Daniels Danieley, in honor of their parents, the annual award recognizes an outstanding teacher each year with a certificate of recognition and a monetary award.

Each year the award raises the question of what it means to be an excellent teacher. Students and colleagues of Dr. Russell Gill, professor of English, have answered that question this year by pointing to him. As the recipient of the 1986-87 Daniels-Danieley Award for Excellence in Teaching, Gill is described by a colleague in this way:

"For the depth of his knowledge, his sympathy and quiet dignity with all students, his creativity in the classroom, and his devotion to extending the range of all our teaching, Russell Gill is more than worthy of our lasting recognition."

With characteristic modesty, Russell Gill disclaims any special knowledge of what makes a teacher excellent. In doing so, however, he unwittingly reveals his very own qualifications.

"A teacher offers himself as a personality, as a stimulus," he explains. "He offers an attitude and seeks to motivate. I believe a teacher doesn't teach; he provides the environment for students to learn on their own."

According to one of his students, Gill's classroom always offers a productive blend of instruction and discussion. "He never shies away from difficult questions," she commented, "and he doesn't make us feel uncomfortable with our questions, no matter what they are. I always feel like he values my thoughts, even if he doesn't agree."

Gill came to Elon in 1976. He earned a bachelor's degree at The College of William and Mary. He received a master's degree and a doctoral degree in English from Harvard University. He is currently Chairman of the Department of Literature, Languages and Communications.

In order to maintain his own high standards of scholarship, Gill spends a lot of time reading, researching and writing. In his words, "To be a professor means that you profess a discipline in many ways—teaching is just one of them." Broadening his own knowledge and acquiring new skills have always been priorities for him.

Gill employs innovative approaches to classroom and curriculum, exemplified by his recent courses in Poe and non-traditional literary forms. He is a believer in collaborative learning—not only as it applies to students working together, but also to interdisciplinary cooperation as the Writing-Across-the-Curriculum approach illustrates. Gill also is an advocate of new educational technology, like Elon's closed-circuit TV system and computer labs.

"The challenge in teaching," Gill notes, "is to make students active rather than passive. One of my goals is to get students to pace themselves, set their own learning goals and pursue them."

Fulbright Scholar Angyal Returns from Hungary

By Susan Klopman

Dr. Andrew Angyal, associate professor of English, was awarded a Fulbright Senior Lectureship in American literature for a six-month term at Louis Kossuth University in Debrecen, Hungary. His term began in January and ended just recently. Angyal, who came to Elon in 1976, is the first professor in Elon's history to be awarded a Fulbright Senior Lectureship. Editor's note

Consumers of fried foods, devotees of chic fashion, lovers of books and flowers, and a people quietly pro-American—meet the Hungarians. Not what you expected? Even though Dr. Andrew J. Angyal had prepared extensively for his months as a Fulbright lecturer at Louis Kossuth University in Debrecen, Hungary, he met the unexpected too—finding himself in a Soviet-dominated country when the U.S. bombed Libya or within possible range of nuclear fallout after the Chernobyl disaster.

"Like most Europeans, the Hungarian people were originally disapproving, then generally very quiet about the American bombing of Libya," Angyal said. He described the days following the bombing as a week of almost palpable tension as Hungarians feared their country would serve as the passageway to Europe for retaliating terrorists.

As for the Chernobyl explosion, "the Hungarians knew no more than the rest of the world," he said. "The lack of information really highlights the inadequacies of the Soviet system." It was the prevailing winds, not government's protection plan, that saved Hungary from greater exposure to the fallout.

Officially, Hungarians know only what the government-controlled media are allowed to present. Angyal found the BBC and Voice of America radio broadcasts to be his vital links to the free world. Interestingly, Angyal did believe that the official press conveyed fair, impartial news of the Challenger disaster. "There was universal sympathy for the loss," he noted, and nationality ceased to be a distinction during a public memorial service sponsored by the U.S. Embassy and allowed by the Hungarian government.

No doubt these memories will stand as biographic bench marks in Angyal's life; yet it is probably the abundance of typical days that he will reference most often. Teaching three American literature courses at Debrecen, lecturing at other universities, sightseeing and visiting relatives, opening the Martin Luther King exhibit—these were events filling the majority of his days.

His classes at Debrecen were generally small—10 to 15 students each, 90 percent of whom were women. The university itself has approximately 2,500 undergraduates. Admission is selective, determined by rigorous state examinations so that only the top ten percent of the population can attend the free university. More examinations monitor the student's progress during the four years. There is a fifth or postgraduate year during which a student writes a master's thesis. Then a degree is conferred.

"The students are bright, well-prepared and highly motivated,"

Centennial Committee at Work

Elon's Centennial will be celebrated during the 1988-89 academic year, and plans are already well under way. A special committee has been formed with representative membership from the town of Elon College and the United Church of Christ as well as college trustees, administration, faculty, students and alumni.

Founders Day in March 1989 will mark the height of the celebration. Proposals for other Centennial activities include special worship services in the fall and spring, performances in fine arts, and events designed for joint town and college participation.

In an effort to plan a commemorative publication, the college is asking for interesting original photographs or snapshots from Elon's history—early or recent. If you have any photographs you are willing to lend or donate to the college archives, please contact Nan Perkins, Director of Publications and Public Information, Campus Box 2116, Elon College, N.C., 27244; telephone 919-584-2231.

Second Grad Takes State CPA Honors

Elmer Edmonds '72 achieved the highest score of anyone taking the CPA exam in November 1985 in the state of Georgia. With that distinction he joins Greensboro's Elizabeth Schumacher '74, who made the highest score in North Carolina during the same November exam. (For details of Schumacher's achievement, see the May issue of The Magazine of Elon.) For his accomplishment, Edmunds received the Gold Key Award from the Georgia Society of CPA's and the Watts Sells Award for scoring among the top 125 in the nation.

Elmer Edmonds was a unique success story at Elon even before earning this distinction. He had been out of high school for nearly 20 years when he entered Elon in 1966. He was only a part-time student because he was employed full time with Burlington Industries. However, in 1972 he was graduated summa cum laude with a perfect 4.0 average in accounting. Edmonds just earned his MBA at Mercer University this year while being employed full time with the Dyka Company in Macon, Georgia. He and his wife, Valerie, have two children: a son, Russ, of Robbins, Georgia, and a daughter, Karen Carlson of Raleigh. They also have another "first" besides the outstanding CPA score—their first grandson, Christopher, born to Russ and his wife on June 5.

Senior Class Gift Establishes Endowment Fund

A definite image is evoked when "senior class gift" is mentioned: it is the image of a small plaque affixed to a tree or bench on campus, signifying the generous spirit of a graduating class of the past. At Elon, senior class gifts have largely fit into that mold, the most noteworthy being the long-standing Senior Oak.

The Class of 1986 wanted to break out of that traditional mold and give Elon something different. To do that they came up with the idea of the 1986 Senior Class Pride Campaign. At two meetings early in the spring, the class decided to print and sell "Class of 1986" T-shirts. Proceeds would go to the Annual Fund.

Thanks to the generosity of an anonymous trustee and a matching gift from the Student Government Association, the class was also able to establish an endowment fund. With an initial total of $2900, the fund should grow to nearly $40,000 in 25 years and to almost $500,000 in 50 years. The money has been invested by the college, with interest accruing to the fund. At a future time, the class will recommend a particular use.

According to Senior Class President Ray Covington, the project was successful in more ways than one. "We had great participation and will be able to make a very impressive gift to Elon," he said. "More than that though, the project brought the class together and gave us a sense of closeness we never had before." A total of more than 150 seniors, as well as 25 faculty and staff members, contributed to the campaign.

The Senior Class Pride Campaign was coordinated by Bob Moser '86, administrative assistant for development.

Alberta B. Harrell '18 Dies in May

Mrs. Alberta Boone Harrell '18 of Durham, N.C., died on May 18. She was the widow of Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, pastor of Durham Congregational Church for 33 years and a member of the Elon Board of Trustees.

Mrs. Harrell's family has been an important part of Elon's history since the turn of the century. Her father was Dr. Waldo H. Boone, a graduate in the Class of 1894 and a member of the Board of Trustees from 1915 until 1953, serving as chairman from 1935 until 1953. Her brother was Dr. Waldo H. Boone, a Durham physician who also served on the Board from 1958 until 1977. In 1978 he was named an honorary trustee for life, ex officio. Mrs. Harrell's nephew C. Stanley Boone '66, son of Waldo W. Boone Jr., was the director of admissions at Elon from 1966-1975.

Mrs. Harrell was a member and former regent of the General Davis Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution. Her dedication to community organizations was evident in her work as chairman of the Heart Fund.

Several years ago Mrs. Harrell gave her Durham home to the college while retaining life estate rights to the property.

She is survived by a daughter, Ms. Mary Ann Harrell of Bethesda, Maryland.

Staley P. Gordon '34 Dies

Staley P. Gordon of Burlington died May 20 after several months of failing health. A 1934 graduate of Elon, Gordon was retired vice president and secretary of Tower Hosiery Mills and former president of Shadowbrook Hosiery Mill. He served for some time as the chairman of the Board of Directors for Community Federal Savings and Loan Association, was a former director of the National Hosiery Association, and a past president of the American Business Club. He was also a former director of Alamance Country Club and an elder of the First Presbyterian Church of Burlington. He was instrumental in establishing and funding a scholarship in memory of his late daughter, Nancy Gordon Sheffield. His family has requested that memorials be sent to this scholarship fund. Gordon is survived by his wife, Hallie Wayne Hornaday Gordon and by his daughter, Mrs. R.C. Lewis Jr. Gordon was the brother of Clyde W. Gordon, a long-time trustee of the college who died on May 4, 1986.

Alumni

Friends of the College To Tour Britain

The Office of Alumni and Parent Relations announces a tour of Britain as part of Elon's traditional Winter Term in England—January 5-29, 1987. At a cost of $1,625 per person, alumni, parents, and other friends of the college may take part in the Winter Term program, participating in those events and experiences of most interest or, if they wish, setting out on their own.

The basic tour includes round-trip air transportation via KLM from Kennedy Airport in New York; hotel accommodations (two per room); continental breakfasts in London; a variety of one-day trips to Dover, Bath, Canterbury, Stratford on Avon, Stonehenge, and Windsor Castle; a play, concert, and ballet; a week of "free travel"; and two days in Amsterdam. Trips to other places of special interest can be arranged at an additional cost.

Tour members may participate in the scheduled tour events as well as individual class activities, thus benefiting from the expertise of Elon faculty and English guides. Others may wish to spend most of the 25-day period traveling independently. A member of the Winter Term staff will offer advice in working out the best program for individual tour members.

Only 80 spaces are available for the London Winter Term; therefore, reservations must be made quickly. For further information, contact Bill Long, Director, Office of Alumni and Parent Relations, Box 2107, Elon College, Elon College, N.C., 27244 or call (919) 584-2380.

New Chapter Presidents

Four alumni chapters have new presidents. Along with providing leadership for their particular chapters, they will become members of the Alumni Executive Committee which has general oversight of the alumni program.

E.H. (Rick) Teller '75 has assumed the helm of the Greater Washington Chapter, succeeding Robert (Bob) Harris Pafe '75. Rick is associated with the Pinkerton Security Company as program manager in Washington. He earned a BA in political science while at Elon and was a member of the Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity. With his wife, Cheryl, he resides at 9723 Bragg Lane, Manassas, VA 22110.

Nancy Redd Penick '80 is the new president of the Greater Richmond Chapter. Her immediate predecessor was Linda May Shields '67. Nancy is a member of the staff of Investors Savings and Loan in Bon Air, Va. Phi Mu Sorority and active as a peer counselor in the residence halls. Her BA degree was in human service. She and her husband, Joseph (Joe) Bernard Penick, live at 307 Pamela Lane, Richmond, VA 23233

Sandra (Sandy) Jones Lemons '81 will head the Greater Charlotte Chapter for the coming year, succeeding Stanley (Stan) Edward Butler '78. Sandy is employed at the Lincoln County Hospital in Lincolnton, NC. During her years at Elon she was a member of the Zeta Tau Alpha Sorority. Her BA degree is in human services. She and her husband, Richard, live in Lincolnton—address: Route 2, Box TO-17, Lincolnton, NC 28092.

Michael (Mike) Joe Willett '82 is the newest chapter president, assuming leadership of the Greater Sanford Chapter. He succeeds Donald (Don) Eugene Dollar '70. Mike is associated with the Federal Land Bank Association of Sanford. At Elon, where he earned a BA degree in business administration and accounting, he was chairman of the Business Student's Communications Committee. Mike lives at 521 West Chisholm Street, Sanford, NC 27330.

As these alumni assume the presidency of their respective chapters, the college and the Executive Committee of the Alumni Association wish to express profound appreciation for the loyal, energetic, and tireless leadership provided by the immediate past presidents, each of whom has pledged to continue supporting chapter activities.

Defective gene research becomes a Nobel pursuit

By Betty Greene

Nothing can match the excitement of something new. ~EMW

On the morning the 1985 Nobel laureates were announced, Edith McCauley Womack was one of the first to arrive at the Molecular Genetics Department of the University of Texas Health Science Center in Dallas.

"I got to work as usual around 6:30 a.m. to avoid the terrible North Dallas rush hour," recalls Womack, a research associate in the department.

"As I walked down the hall, I heard phones ringing in the doctors' offices. I could only wonder what was happening, since their doors were locked. Then some of my co-workers arrived and told me that the news had just come over the radio."

The news was as big as news can get in medical research. Womack's research team leaders, Dr. Joseph Goldstein and Dr. Michael Brown, had been selected to receive the Nobel Prize in Medicine.

"Soon the department was buzzing with congratulations—phone calls came in from Good Morning America, Evening News, and all over the world," Womack continues. "The doctors were in Boston for a conference, but they flew home immediately. They are publicity shy and prefer to be on the job, so they refused interviews. But we celebrated and were interviewed by reporters for days. John (my husband) rushed home that first day to get everything on tape. A Danish film crew and a British film crew taped a documentary of all of us at work."

Brown and Goldstein were awarded the Nobel for their research into the metabolism of cholesterol. Studying patients with a rare, often fatal inherited disorder, FH (familial hypercholesterolemia), Brown, Goldstein, and their research team located the gene defect responsible for FH. Their discoveries, since 1972, unraveled and explained the mechanism by which cells remove cholesterol "packages" from the bloodstream and process the "package" contents inside the cell. Cholesterol, packaged in a low density lipoprotein molecule (LDL), circulates through the bloodstream and is removed by liver cells. Since FH patients have faulty mechanisms for removing LDL molecules, the patients carry dangerous excesses of cholesterol in their bloodstreams.

Acclaim has come to Drs. Brown and Goldstein from medical and scientific colleagues all over the world, not only because their work opens doors to effective treatments for FH patients, but also because the research promises prevention and treatment breakthroughs for the 30 to 50 million Americans who suffer from diet-related hardening of the arteries.

Womack played a key support role in the Nobel-honored research. As research associate, her duties include supervising the tissue culture laboratory where she and her co-workers cultured and maintained the special cells from FH patients as well as the animal cells used by Brown and Goldstein in their cholesterol research. Womack conducted preliminary screening experiments and provided critical data and assistance for the research directors.

"Most of the research work required tissue culture in some part so I had a hand in most projects. Dr. Goldstein works closely with me and considers this lab the core of his research," Womack says.

Along with a team of fifty or more faculty members, post-doctorate interns, and technical personnel, Womack now continues the cholesterol-related research and participates in new projects.

She and her co-workers handle skin biopsies from FH patients from all over the world. They "plant" fragile cell cultures in petri dishes or roller bottles under protective biohazard hoods. Sterile conditions are vital. Contamination by yeasts, molds, and bacteria must be prevented.

Womack performs screening experiments to determine when a patient has the defective FH gene. She then locates the abnormal link in the genetic chain, transfers genetic material from one cell culture to another, and clones cells. Her tasks require uniformity and precision. The project may, in the future, contribute to gene transplants and to cures for FH and other inherited diseases.

Little did Womack dream, when she left Elon in the fifties, that her life and her work would take her close to anything as significant and prestigious as the Nobel Prize.

She reflects about Dr. Paul Reddish (now retired) who made each of his Elon biology students feel like a very special person. She remembers being the only student to show up on time one day for Dr. Earl Danieley's class. "He was a stickler for starting on time and proceeded to lecture me alone while the others trickled in. To this day, I remember his topic—Cesium—and how frightened I was that he would ask me questions."

Dr. Danieley, now the Thomas E. Powell, Jr. Professor of Chemistry at Elon, recalls Edith McCauley—a student double-majoring in chemistry and biology—as "a fine, quiet person."

Womack says her "quiet" life after leaving Elon changed to a life of adventure when she moved with her family from South Carolina to Taipei. Her husband, John, (also an Elon grad) supervised the building of a DuPont plant and trained the Chinese employees. Womack taught science in the Taipei American School—the school attended by her son and daughter. While based in Taipei, Womack traveled around the world four times with her family, visiting 30 countries in Europe and Asia. She values the experience with people of other cultures, especially now that her colleagues at the university include people from Japan, Hong Kong, Taiwan, Spain, Germany, and Austria.

In 1980 Womack and her family moved to Plano, a northern suburb of Dallas.

"We love the Dallas area," she says. "It's dynamic, progressive, and full of opportunities. We have an abundance of sunshine, warm weather, and heavy traffic!"

Three months after arriving in Dallas, Womack went to work for Drs. Goldstein and Brown at the University of Texas Health Science Center. Her previous work as a registered medical technologist and a science teacher helped her get the laboratory position. Changing to research work was an important step.

Womack believes opportunities in science today are abundant. "If I had gone into research earlier, I would definitely have pursued a Ph.D. Science is a wide open field for women today. Funds are available for graduate degrees and so are jobs. You just have to seek them out. Molecular genetics and biotechnology are the hot areas now.

"Anyone who goes into science must be prepared to work hard," she continues. "Our post-doctorates work 6-7 days a week, 10 or more hours a day. I work many holidays and Sundays and put in many 50-hour weeks."

But when Womack talks about a six-year-old patient, "Stormy," treated successfully with heart-liver transplants and drugs as a result of her team's research, it is clear that her workdays are worth starting early and ending late.

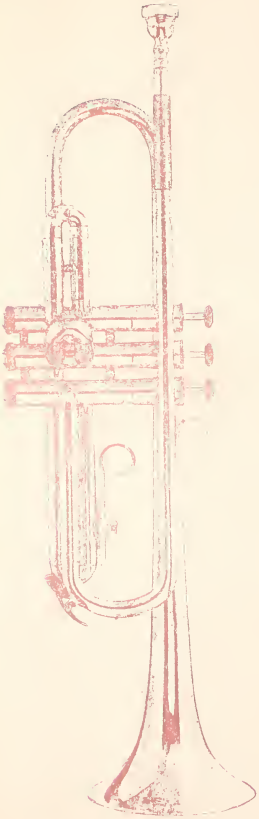
"This is one job I truly look forward to each day," she says with deep feeling. "Nothing can match the excitement of uncovering something new."

"I may not be great, nor have I done anything great," she adds, "but I know I am part of something great."

JAZZMAN

Elon's Soundest Ambassador Carries A New Tune

By Doug Norwood '84



Dr. Jack White wouldn't last two minutes on "What's My Line." With a little triangle of white beard on his chin and sentences punctuated by "man" and "dig it," he could only be a jazz man.

In the past 23 years, White, a trumpet player with a voice like a bass drum, has developed and directed Elon College's marching band, the Showband of the Carolinas, the Concert Band and the Emanons Jazz Ensemble.

When he came to Elon in 1962, White found a marching band with eight members who had practically no equipment or instruments. They didn't have a band room to practice in. He worked long and hard to build the marching band and then the Emanons, who have been the school's ambassadors up and down the Eastern Seaboard and in Europe.

Now, White says he's tired.

His health is not what it used to be and as he's gotten older, White says, "I've learned how to do the horn without killing myself." So, at age 59, he's going to strike out on his own as a one-man show billed "Dr. J., Easy Listening Jazz."

White, who has played regularly in clubs here and in Florida, says he knows the change will not be easy. "I'm not frightened by retirement, I'm terrified," he says.

And he will leave behind some gratifying years of teaching. "Of those original eight band members, three are still playing professionally; that's a long time," White says with a proud smile, then rattles off their names and where they're playing.

He had successfully built award-winning bands at high schools in Cary and Wytheville, Va., before coming to Elon. He came here ready to do whatever was necessary to keep his winning streak alive.

He joined Elon's staff in the summer of '62 and increased the eight band members to 48 by the time football season started. After the season, he organized the Emanons, the pride and joy of his Elon years.

"That was a great band," he says of the original Emanons, "hell, those kids could blow."

The unginly name is actually "No Name" spelled backwards; it was the title of a song by Dizzy Gillespie.

Twenty-three years later, White says, "It's a strange thing, how time moves on, but, man, these kids never change."

"It was a really big deal back then. The kids were more into bonfires and the 'rah-rah' type thing—you know, dances with crepe paper," he says. "But I think today's kids are just as great."

He believes his students today can be better musicians because their educational opportunities are greater.

White says his formula for success has few ingredients.

He thinks his students like his "hard-but-fair" approach to teaching. "They really do pull for me," he says. "The kids do real good.

"I'm a great believer in yelling," he says. "I talk loud and push hard."

White says, "I can dig rock if it's done right." Rock 'n roll can only be done right, he says, when the musician is firmly grounded in the basics of jazz.

"Remember, Picasso painted regular stuff before he started cubism," he says.

When the Emanons perform for young audiences in high schools, they play a mix of old and new music, White says.

"We'll do your top 40 and then sneak in some jazz," he says, "We'll do 'Emergency' by Kool & the Gang and then slip in 'Blue Invasion,' and the kids really dig it. We get a standing ovation every time."

But when push comes to shove, White says his true love is still jazz. He'd like to play "elevator music" as he calls it, for a lounge full of customers 35 and over—"the kind of place you could take a chick for dinner or a drink" and still be able to talk over the music.

When White does his one-man show, he uses an elaborate system of tapes for accompaniment while he sings and plays songs like "Star Dust" and "Body and Soul" on the trumpet or flugelhorn.

After he gives up teaching in June, he will move to Beaufort with his wife, Jo Ann.

Just as he had done for 23 years with Elon's bands, White hopes to travel far and wide to further the cause of jazz.

Fightin' Christian Forecast

Elon College head football coach Macky Carden will return a veteran offensive line when the 1986 campaign begins, and with the most talented athletes ever assembled, the Fightin' Christians look to return to the national playoffs.

"This year's team will have more athletic ability than any other in my ten years of coaching here," Carden said. "We have given up some size in the defensive line and other areas, but we feel we'll be quicker and have more natural ability. Our offensive line will also have a chance to be the best ever. All five projected starters were at least part-time starters or played more than half of each game."

Elon does indeed have one of the South Atlantic Conference's best returning offensive lines. The expected starters average 6'1", 250 lbs. across. They will be led by All-American candidate Alphonso Morrison. Morrison, 6'0" 250 lb. senior from Hamlet, N.C., was selected first team All-District and honorable mention All-America in 1985. Morrison will be left guard. Also on the left at tackle is Rocky River, Ohio native Tony DiPietro. DiPietro, 6'0" 270 lb. sophomore, was selected honorable mention All-District at right guard last year before switching positions.

Also on the front line will be Wilson's Dave Emery, 6'1" 250 lb. sophomore, at right guard and massive Ricky Sigmon at right tackle. Sigmon, one of the premier offensive linemen in the league, tips the scales at 315 while standing 6'4". He comes from Catawba, N.C. At center is sophomore Kevin Campbell, 6'0" 235 lb., from Southern Pines, N.C.

Chuck Ward will be at tight end. Ward, a native of Roanoke Rapids, N.C., is a junior, standing 6'5" and weighing 235 lb. He averaged 12.4 yps last year with one touchdown.

In the backfield, only one starter returns, and that is the form of Orange, Maryland native Mike O'Lari. His running mate will be Laurinburg, N.C., sophomore Dwayne Clark, 5'9" 200 lb.

At quarterback will be senior Craig Taylor, 5'11" 180 lb. from Boone. Taylor has not played much due to injuries in his career. Carden does feel he will be a very capable leader.

On defense, Carden will look to a pair of All-America candidates in outside linebacker Tony Settles and inside linebacker Russell Evans. Settles, 6'3" 215 lb. senior from Laurinburg, was accorded All-District and All-SAC-8 a year ago as well as honorable mention All-America. Evans, 6'3" 205 lb. senior from Cheraw, S.C., was honorable mention All-District.

Joining Settles on the outside will be Ronnie Purcell, 6'0" 205 lb. sophomore from Carthage, N.C. On the inside will be senior Tim Farmer, 6'0" 215 lb. from Midlothian, Va.

In the secondary will be sophomore cornerback Willie Williams, 5'9" 185 lb. from Clinton, and sophomore Jeff Slade, 6'0" 190 lb. from Conway, S.C. At the safeties will be junior Tim Ferrell, 5'10" 200 lb. from Danville, Va., and Tim Bines, 5'9" 170 lb. junior from Bennettsville, S.C.

Carden said the defense may be apt to give up more yards this season but will be able to hold on in key situations. "I think our overall athletic talent should enable us to improve on recovering more fumbles and making a few more interceptions. The guys should be able to have more people to the ball quicker. This is an area we must improve on and I feel sure we will."

The kicking game has been somewhat suspect lately but Carden says 1986 will be better. Sophomore Paul Mullen will return to do the placekicking chores and possibly kick-off. Unless a freshman steps forward, Mullen would also see duty as a punter. Mullen is 5'10", 160 lb. from Myrtle Beach, S.C.

"We're hoping the defense will be able to make the big play. As for the conference race, we feel we have a good a chance as anyone and better than some others. We really won't know until we line up and get things started."

The 1986 Elon Baseball Nine: The Classiest Act in Town

By Lee Patterson

The following article is reprinted with permission of the Burlington (N.C.) Times-News. It appeared in mid-May while the Elon baseball team was away at the NAIA Region 7 tournament in Bluefield, W. Va. Although Elon was eliminated from the tournament, they were certainly clear winners in the eyes of columnist Lee Patterson and others.

The game of baseball, for the most part, is not one of those sports we label a gentleman's game.

We don't sit in the stands clapping our hands in a polite way or become silent when a batter approaches the plate.

Instead, as baseball fans, as baseball players, we hoot and holler, complain aloud to the umpires and sling semi-unkind words to the opposition.

And that's the way the game should be.

But, at the same time, there should be a limit to it all.

When teams and their fans decide to use filthy language, make obscene gestures toward the opponents and attempt to promote fighting on the playing field, baseball no longer is a sport.

During the latter part of this week, four teams met for the NAIA Region 7 baseball tournament in Bluefield, W. Va. All four clubs certainly rated high on athletic skill, but in the manners department three failed miserably.

One of the participating teams, however, showed class and maturity upon winning and upon losing.

Never did unkind words or gestures spill from the team's dugout. Never were there any attempts to intimidate umpires.

Never.

Not on and not off the field.

Such mature and classy actions don't come overnight either.

The ballclub displayed this type behavior throughout the season as it won 35 games and lost but 14.

Part of the credit certainly should go to the coach. He is the one recruiting players from families made of good people and he continues to teach the positives of good sportsmanship.

Maybe that is why, in only two years, the coach owns a winning mark of nearly 80 percent. And maybe that is why he has led his team to more victories than any other before him.

It certainly must help.

But more importantly, winning in a classy way builds a positive image for a program.

And an image which can even drift deep into the Blue Ridge Mountains.

This fall, Elon's football games will be aired live over two radio stations. Bob Anderson will be doing the play-by-play analysis and Wes Durham will add color commentary for the college radio station WSOE, 89.3 FM.

For fans in surrounding areas, Reidsville, N.C.'s 100,000-watt station WWMO, 102 FM, will broadcast all games beginning with Elon's second game on Saturday, September 20.

The Admissions Game

Elon Sets the Standards and Stays On Top

By Nan Perkins and Susan Klopman

As Elon nears the opening of its 98th academic year, the college is once again experiencing its best recruiting year in memory. Applications are up 25 percent over last year, and the largest and best prepared freshman class in Elon history is expected to enroll during Labor Day weekend. The SAT average for the new students is 40 points higher than last year.

The flux of well-qualified applicants has generated some problems. Campus housing—which can accommodate approximately 1700—has been full since early May, with only a few exceptions. In early June lack of available classroom space forced Admissions to stop accepting transfers and to raise again the academic standards for admitting freshmen commuters.

"We are having to turn away students we would really like to accept," says Dean of Admissions and Financial Planning Joanne Soliday. "We just don't have the room."

Recently a special academic program was created to accommodate some of the many transfer students who traditionally apply to Elon during the summer months. A block of afternoon courses was added and well qualified commuting transfer students are being accepted with the provision that they take all their courses after 3:00 p.m. This alternative has been dubbed the "four-day program," reflecting the fact that afternoon and evening classes are taught only Monday through Thursday. The program allows the college to teach courses during the afternoon hours when classrooms are traditionally not in use.

The Elon recruiting success is especially remarkable in light of the fact that the college continues steadily to upgrade admissions standards. In a speech to the faculty two years ago, which was reported in the media, President Fred Young announced a policy of gradually raising the requirements for admissions as Elon headed for its Centennial year.

"It is our goal that by the Centennial year Elon will be at the top among private colleges in this region with missions similar to ours," said Young at the time. Since then applications have increased 40 percent and the SAT average for entering students has risen over 60 points.

College officials expect a total enrollment of approximately 3100 for the 1986-87 academic year, up from 2929 last year. Ten new full-time faculty positions have been created. Enrollment at Elon has increased every year for the last nine. The college has added housing for over 600 students in recent years.

The Reason for Success

One question, of course, is why. When so many private colleges are faced with declining enrollments and even possible extinction, how is Elon able to recruit an overflow of well-qualified students?

According to Soliday, the answer is a strong program across the board. "A good recruiting program is a good institutional program," says Soliday. "Faculty are an especially important key, and Elon is noted for having a strong and caring teaching staff." In a recent survey 97 percent of the graduating seniors said, on an open-ended question, that the relationship that they formed with faculty was one of the things they liked best about Elon.

In the same survey 95 percent of the seniors expressed overall satisfaction with their years at Elon. "And satisfied students are our best recruiters," Soliday points out. "An excellent facility and good administrative leadership are other factors in Elon's ability to attract good students. We have clearly defined institutional goals identifying the students that Elon seeks to serve," she says. "We know who we are and we know where we're going.

"And when they see this campus and meet students and faculty, they're sold," she continues. " This is just what I thought a college ought to be like,' is a comment we often hear."

At the same time a great deal of credit must be given to the Elon admissions staff. The college's department of admissions and financial aid is generally recognized as one of the most effective and progressive among similar institutions —true pioneers in the field of college marketing and recruitment.

The current success of the Elon admissions program has its roots in the direction of Mrs. Marydell Bright, who headed the department for more than 10 years before retiring in 1984. It has gained steam under the current dean, Joanne Soliday, who heads a staff of highly trained professionals and spearheads a four-state recruiting effort that goes on 12 months a year, six to seven days a week, and up to 16 hours a day. In today's highly competitive market, recruiting cannot be a haphazard pursuit. Excellent planning, computerization of records, focus on the individual, and meticulous attention to detail are the cornerstones of the program.

From Inquiry to Enrollment

The recruiting process officially begins approximately 18 months before a student would enroll. From the Search program of the Scholastic Aptitude Testing Service, the Office of Admissions purchases thousands of names of prospective students who fall within the college's SAT range and geographical areas. Through this and other sources, admissions accumulates the names of approximately 28,000 potential applicants. Publications introducing Elon are mailed to these people and others whose names have been submitted by alumni and friends. In recent years, Elon has added a staff which produces its own admissions publications and responses from these mailings have since then risen significantly. From the initial Search mailing Elon now receives a remarkable 17 percent response.

The real secret to the Elon admissions program, however, is not based on mail-order information. "Our philosophy is to meet the individual, to talk to every person who shows an interest in Elon," Soliday explains. This ambitious, and obviously successful approach involves thousands of man-hours and miles as Soliday and six full-time traveling admissions counselors (who are all Elon graduates) visit high schools in all four states, participate in College Day programs and host "Hospitality Nights" in major cities throughout the area.

Campus visitation is one of the best recruiting tools. "There is no substitute for a visit to Elon," Soliday notes. "Prospective applicants meet the faculty, talk to students and see our beautiful campus. They discover for themselves what outstanding people and excellent facilities Elon offers."

It is no small task to host a large number of prospective students and

For New Freshman DeJerf~Seeing Campus Meant Love a

By Susan Klopman

(The following is the first in a series of articles following Denese Marie DeJerf through her freshman year at Elon.)

"I'd really like to be a photojournalist for National Geographic Magazine," explained articulate, poised Denese Marie DeJerf, Elon College Class of 1990. Even through a telephone interview, her confidence is contagious; somehow you just know she'll achieve her goal.

Why is Elon College the choice for this Arlington, Virginia, resident? "I learned about Elon from my guidance counselor (at Wakefield High School). I liked what I heard, so I came for the visitation day last fall."

Denese went on to describe her initial reponse to Elon as "falling in love." However, not one to leave a thought trapped by a cliche, she elaborated: "The atmosphere is personal and friendly, and the campus is the perfect size. It's really beautiful." Denese added that she's ready for a change from the look and feel of the greater Washington, D.C. area.

She plans to major in mass communication as the first step in her pursuit of a career as a photojournalist. Elon's communications department impressed her. Elon is becoming well-known for its state-of-the-art equipment and the fact that students get lots of hands-on experience. She also talked to Dr. Russell Gill, chairman of the Department of Literature, Languages and Communications, and to Ray Johnson, assistant professor of communications.

Discovering that Elon could really their parents. However, with Admissions' characteristic attention to detail, each participant is hosted personally—from having the car door opened upon arrival to being introduced to faculty and staff. For example, instead of holding a large assembly, visitors are split into small groups of about 17 people with a student admissions counselor for each group. With such a small group, each individual has the opportunity not only to ask questions, but also to get a personal answer.

Questions about the cost of a college education are met on a personal basis too. Even the name—the Office of Financial Planning—indicates that Elon's approach to financing the cost of a college education is different. Each applicant is offered the opportunity for an individual financial planning interview. Because of the many scholarships and financial aid programs at Elon, counselors can tailor financial planning to meet the student's particular circumstances.

By spring of a student's senior year, the field of 28,000 names has become 3,000 potential applicants. Elon's admissions counselors revisit each high school in all four states and make one more personal contact as decisions about a college choice are being made. By summer—early June this year—1,000 of those applicants will have been notified that they are members of the incoming freshman class. The admissions process is over for the new students. But for the college it has already begun again.

Workshop Teaches Teens How To Survive In College

By Nan Perkins

It is a typical high school group. The students—all seniors—are laid back in their chairs, feet propped everywhere. Although they have just heard a glowing introduction of the speaker, a young woman there to talk about adjusting to college life, they are obviously reserving judgment.

"Pretend with me that it is August 15 and you're ready to leave for college," she begins, her hands betraying her enthusiasm. "The shopping is done, the car is packed and you've said goodbye to your friends.

"Now complete this sentence: 'But I'm still very worried about _____.'"

Interest flickers. A few backs straightend. Hands begin to go up. Another fast-paced presentation of Joanne Soliday's workshop, "How to Survive or Not Survive in College," is launched.

The fears expressed by the students are always the same—getting along with a roommate, dealing with professors, leaving one's friends, hating the food, flunking out. The students' attention is captured and held even past the 50 minutes usually allotted for the presentation.

Soliday, Elon's dean of admissions and financial planning, developed the "How to Survive" workshop in 1983 as a service for college-bound seniors. Since then, she has delivered it over 500 times to more than 9,000 students.

The workshop focuses on the academic and social adjustments students will be faced with in college. Academically, Soliday tries to prepare them for differences in college class hours, grading practices, and the shift in the burden of learning from teacher to student.

"You're now in class 30 hours a week," she explains. "In college, you'll be in class only about 15 hours a week. But to make C's, most of you will need to study about one hour outside of class for every hour you're in class. To make A's and B's—two hours of study for every one in class.

"Make a simple chart to schedule your study time in college, even if you have to hide in the closet or bathroom to do it," Soliday advises, showing on a board how a chart can be made with X's for class time and O's for study. But be flexible, she adds.

"When your roommate comes and says 'Come on, we're all going down to Pizza Hut,' go ahead and break the schedule. But reschedule that study time for later in the week. Don't let it pile up."

"You're SMART enough to handle the college workload," she emphasizes. "But you also have to be STRONG enough"—a point she returns to again and again.

Socially, Soliday's presentation focuses on the danger of unrealistic expectations often fostered by parents and other adults and the problem of dealing with additional freedom college affords.

"How many times have you heard, 'You're going to make many new friends!'" she asks. Heads nod in recognition.

"But it's taken you 17 years to make the two or three or maybe one really good friend you have now. You're not going to make new close friends in two weeks," she warns. "Expect some loneliness at first."

Dealing with drugs, alcohol and the almost unlimited social freedom of college life is another topic. "What are you going to do when your roommate brings his girlfriend in to spend the night?" she asks candidly.

Again, she advises, you've got to be strong. "Someone is setting your limits for you now, but in college you've got to set your own." You've got to know what you value, what you like and don't like. And you've got to communicate your feelings to those around you.

"If you don't know who you are when you go to college," she states, "you could be someone else in a matter of weeks."

Joanne C. Soliday

Peppered with humorous accounts of Soliday's experiences as the mother of a college-age daughter, as a former associate dean of students at Elon and as a dean of admissions, the animated presentation has an authenticity that is immediately recognized by high school seniors. Students are totally engaged throughout the 50-minute presentation, and many stay to ask questions afterward.

Because of the great demand for the workshop, Soliday has recently begun to train other college admissions counselors and high school guidance counselors to present the information on their own. She has delivered the workshop at numerous counselors conventions, at the 1985 Regional College Board Assembly in Atlanta and at the National Convention of College Admissions Counselors in 1985 in Cincinnati. This summer, she is helping to train 50 college admissions counselors from throughout the Carolinas to become certified workshop presentors, as part of a special project of the Carolinas Association of College Registrars and Admissions Counselors.

A videotape of the presentation is also available and is being used extensively. Soliday has also recently developed a similar workshop designed for the parents of college-bound seniors. It, too, is growing in popularity.

First Sight

meet her career needs was important, but perhaps what made the day really special is the friendship that began between Denese and her student tour guide Lisa Milanak. Lisa invited Denese back again to spend several weekends during the fall. She came, and it didn't take long for Elon to start feeling like Denese's college too.

Denese also applied to Virginia Tech and James Madison College. Her solid academic background, including various academic awards, made her a very acceptable applicant at those institutions. There is also some family history with Tech.

"I've talked about going to Virginia Tech since I was in the 5th grade," she said. "One of our relatives is a researcher there, so I really feel like Tech is part of the family." The remark that followed is the tell-tale one: "When I saw Elon though, I didn't care about other colleges."

While Denese is very excited about coming to Elon, she is realistic about the adjustments that college life requires. "I guess living with a stranger will be the most dramatic change for me," she said, adding: "But I think it will be very interesting and I'll learn a lot about myself in the process.

"I'm pretty independent. My parents have always been very supportive," Denese noted and probably explained the reason for her impressive self-confidence without even realizing it.

"My dad coaches football too," Denese explained as the entree into her interest in photography. "We gave him a camera, but I ended up taking it!" she laughed. "I started taking photos of the football games. I really enjoyed being on the field with Dad." The two of them ended up sharing the camera and classes in photography at a nearby community college.

In addition to experience in sports photography, Denese's high school career included a host of different activities. From yearbook editor to a staff position on the school literary magazine, coincidently named The Pendulum, she certainly has had a taste of journalism.

On the lighter side, Denese was a cheerleader and would like to be one at Elon. "I just love drumming up people's energy, creating excitement and team spirit," she said. That's certainly not hard to believe from energetic and affable Denese Marie DeJerf.

Angyal said. The majority are trilingual, studying Hungarian and Russian by requirement; English by choice. Angyal's students had mastered English well enough to read Faulkner. Students generally double major. To do this they take between 35 and 36, 1-1½ hour courses per semester: 12 courses in their first major, 12 in their second major, and 12 in courses grounded in Marxist ideology.

"The curriculum is very demanding and the students are on chronic overload," Angyal noted. Faculty, on the other hand, have a far more leisurely, almost relaxed schedule. By contrast, Angyal said he gained a new appreciation of how hard Americans work. The difference seems to have more to do with environment than with anything inherent in the national character.

"The Hungarians are a people living under foreign domination. There is a tendency to live for today because tomorrow is not so certain," Angyal noted. Indeed the Hungarians cannot escape the reminders of their Soviet intruders. According to Angyal, their military presence is constant and obvious. Hungary is very important to the Soviets as the most affluent of the Eastern bloc nations. Its location is strategic to Soviet military and economic well-being also.

Despite living under the Soviet yoke, the Hungarian people are warm and hospitable, Angyal discovered. "I was readily incorporated into the community," he adds, so much so in fact, that he calls his Hungarian visit "the richest four months of my life."

"I wish that every faculty member could have this opportunity," Angyal adds. He is, of course, referring to the rewarding experience of being a Fulbright Scholar. One can't help thinking, however, he is also alluding to a visit to Hungary.

VOTE FOR CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT #1 FOR HIGHER EDUCATION

VOTE FOR

Elon College

North Carolina's proposed constitutional amendment #1 will allow Elon to sell tax-exempt bonds to finance construction of new facilities, improvements to facilities and purchase of equipment. The savings in interest paid on bonds by Elon in the future will be substantial.

VOTE FOR

Independent Colleges & Universities

Future students at Elon and 37 other independent colleges and universities in North Carolina will benefit from this constitutional amendment. Tax-exempt bonds will allow these schools to hold down costs to students, while making needed improvements to their facilities

VOTE FOR

The Future of North Carolina

North Carolina's independent colleges and universities play a key role in the state's economy and the quality of life we enjoy. Passage of the constitutional amendment will help ensure that these important institutions of higher education will continue to be a vital part of North Carolina's future.

Classiest Act—

"I sure am sorry that team is out of the tournament," lamented a Bluefield native watching the Region 7 play. "Those boys were here last year and they not only play good hard ball, but they do it the nice way. It's a darn shame the good guys can't always win."

"I want to go over there with that team," requested one of the high school girls, volunteering as a batgirl. "I remember them from last year and they are nice. The other team is a bunch of animals."

Elon coach Rick Jones, his players and Elon Athletic Director Dr. Alan J. White can be proud of the thoughts.

They can be proud the Elon baseball team is an assembly of Fighting Christians.

A majority of this character came forth in Elon's final game of the Region 7 tournament. After losing one, then winning another to stay alive, Elon met the University of South Carolina-Aiken, the second ranked team in the nation.

The opponent played up to its ranking, too. Built an 11-1 lead by the seventh inning with incredible hitting skill. But also during the run production, the Hilltoppers displayed actions of horrendous proportions—vocal and visible.

The Elon players—from their dugout—sat, shook their heads and went about their business.

And the patience, the maturity in not responding to the opposition's vulgarity nearly paid off.

To start the seventh inning, Jones pulled his players aside and told them a little something about pride and dignity.

Lead-off man John Barrick would start the crusade with a two ring home run. The mighty blast would start an 8-run rally—including two other homers—in the final three innings of the game.

The crusade would end, however, with three men aboard, two outs and Andy Barrick representing the winning run at the plate.

The left fielder would send a long fly ball to his spot in the field for the final out of the contest, the final out of Elon's season.

But, no heads drooped to look upon the ground in the realization that it was all over. Instead, the Elon players congratulated each other with high-fives, hugs and words of encouragement.

After all they were the classiest act in town.

J. E. Minnis celebrated his 91st birthday on June 10. A member of the United Methodist Church, he served as a missionary to India for 33 years. He holds a M.Div. degree from Wesley Theological Seminary and an M.A. degree from Drew University. In addition, he studied for a year at Cornell University. His rich career is described in Who's Who in Methodism.

Several years ago, Rev. Minnis presented the Class of 1919 pennant to Elon. Later, he gave the college the Philologan Society pennant.

He has been a widower for approximately five years and lives alone on the farm where he was reared. A neighbor works the fields for him.

Cecil Wickline Jr. is the retired owner of Mintwick Poultry Farm in Waynesboro, Va.

Jo-Nell McCullough writes: "While at Elon I met Paul in 1944 when he visited there from Davidson College—checking out the Elon gals! We celebrated our 40th wedding anniversary on July 7th! We have five children plus 15 grandchildren. This happiness began as we strolled that campus—by O'Kelly—back in 1944-45! So, I have fond memories of Elon—all the students, teachers, ballgames, and hikes of that era are remembered with love! I'd love to hear from any classmate!" (Her address: 367 S. Section St., Fairhope, AL 36532)

Ed Mulford is now 65 and retired from business, but not from softball. Playing with teams in Harpers Crossroads, Sanford, Southern Pines, and Pittsboro each week, he is enjoying his 50th consecutive season of softball—a national record. By the end of this season he will have played nearly 5,000 games and may have reached 9,000 hits, combining both fast-pitch and slo-pitch softball. Although he is playing slo-pitch this summer, he hopes to reorganize his famous travelling Connecticut softball team for a fast-pitch visit to

Margaret Graham Sharpe Lawing '57

Margaret Lawing majored in English, French and drama at Elon. She became a French teacher for eight years after graduation. Then she returned to school and in 1968 received a master's degree in audiology and speech pathology from UNCG. Since that time she has been teaching in the speech department at Central Piedmont Community College in Charlotte.

For the past two summers, Lawing has combined her love for travel and reading by studying French again at the French Institute at UNCG and the University of Provence in France.

Lawing and her husband, Johnny, have a permanent residence at Rt. 2, Bear Creek, NC 27207. During the school term Lawing can be reached at her Charlotte address: 325-4 Queens Rd., Charlotte, NC 28204.

Penny Parker '75

Penny Parker majored in business and accounting at Elon and took graduate courses later on at Old Dominion in Richmond. Parker says that the main thing she has done since graduation is work, work, work!!!

For years she was a senior accountant with the City of Norfolk. Now she is a district manager for Automated Data Processing, a firm which markets automated payroll systems. Parker enjoys traveling and meeting people in this job, and she says no two days are ever alike.

Parker is active with the Dale Carnegie classes in leadership and public speaking. Her goal is to become an instructor. She is also an avid runner.

Her address is: 1452 Bridle Creek Blvd., Virginia Beach, VA 23464.

Robert E. Lee Brandenburg '79

Bob Brandenburg was a hard man to find, but believe it or not, our search brought us right back to Elon where he was assisting with soccer camp the first week in July!

After receiving a B.S. degree in physical education, Brandenburg remained in the Alamance County area for about a year teaching in the county school system. Then he moved to Raleigh to work at the Spa Health Club for two years. In the fall of '82 he went back into teaching and coaching soccer in the Fayetteville area. After several school changes, he will be head soccer coach, JV basketball coach and physical education teacher at Pine Forest Senior High School in Fayetteville beginning this fall.

Brandenburg sees quite a few Elon grads in the Fayetteville area: Mike Bordone '80, Barry '79 and Angie Lintz '80 Duff, Mark '78 and Nancy '78 Heil, and David Lewis '80.

Brandenburg's address is: 917-A Southview Cr., Fayetteville, NC 28301.

Sandy Sanderson '39

The Fruits of the Earth

"What happens when a few Seniors find they have more garden produce than they can use? They find other Seniors who have no garden and share.

"What happens when they are given a field with FIVE TONS of cauliflower? They do the same thing, except that it takes a bit of organizing."

The Reverend E. J. Sanderson '39 of Ben Lomond, California, is the author of that quiz and the genius who did the "bit of organizing" that brought the California Grey Bear's Brown Bag Program into being about eight years ago.

Prompted by the discovery of the tons of food that go to waste and the number of senior citizens who have time, energy and fixed incomes, Sanderson, his wife, Dorothy, and some friends started the California Grey Bears. The group has now become an incorporated, nonprofit organization with 4,000 senior-citizen members picking and distributing about 110 tons or 3800 grocery bags of food per week. On any one day, the Grey Bears may hit the fields to pick a ton of lettuce which has been donated because it is cosmetically deficient (for a head of lettuce that means too large, too small or a bit out of shape, and therefore cannot be sold on the market).

The sources of food are as surprising as the quantities. Sanderson writes: "We also pick up dated food at local supermarkets the day before expiration. It still has a shelf-life of five or six days, and we can get it into the hands of Seniors the next day. Often commercial freezers will bring us several hundred cases of frozen food so they can make room for the new crop. A large warehouse supplies us with 5,000 loaves of bread each week." His amazing story goes on and on, but his letter closes with: "Thank you, Elon. Your help and inspiration played a large role in our success and happiness."

While Sanderson was at Elon, he served the Monticello Christian Church and one in Haw River "getting practical experience while benefitting from such professors as D. J. Bowden (philosophy), Merton French (religion), Dr. Newman (Greek) and Dr. Hook (science)." Sanderson still sees D. J. Bowden occasionally since they are West Coast neighbors.

After Elon, Sanderson did graduate work in theology at Oberlin. He had a 13-year pastorate in Fargo, North Dakota; a 12-year parish in Maui, Hawaii; and a six-year term as a missionary to Samoa under the National Council of Churches. At some point before retirement 12 years ago, he served briefly in parishes in England and New Zealand. Sanderson and his wife are the proud parents of a son, George (who was born at Duke while Sanderson was at Elon), and one daughter, Carol. They are grandparents to five children and great grandparents to two, in addition to being the founders of a family of 4,000.

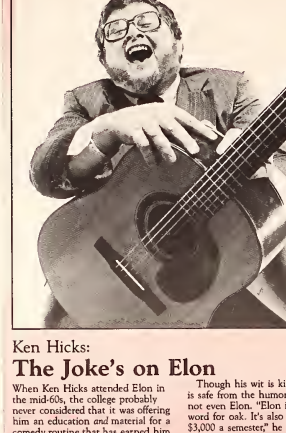
Herbert Wilson McKinstry Jr., known to his friends as both "Bill" and "Whale," has reported a story with a very happy ending.

McKinstry returned to Elon for Homecoming last October and ran into former classmate Laren M. Long '77. The two recalled their college days, including their association with Sigma Phi Epsilon (McKinstry is a brother and Long was a little sister), and what they had been doing since they last saw each other ten years ago.

Another ten years was not to pass before the two would meet again, however! Thanks to direct phone and air service between Wilmington, Del., and Charlotte, NC, McKinstry and Long stayed in touch during the months following Homecoming. In fact, they decided that their renewed acquaintance should last a lifetime. McKinstry says, "Cupid must have been shooting arrows at us over Burlington Memorial Stadium at the football game." In June the two were married in Kennett Square, Pa. Elon was well represented at the wedding, including friends and fraternity-brothers-turned-ushers Doug Durante '77 and Craig Kirtland '77.

McKinstry said: "I have always maintained that some of my best friends were made at Elon and this just proves the point."

McKinstry, president and owner of Val-Pak of Northern Delaware (the oldest and largest cooperative direct mail promotion company in the U.S. and Canada), and Long live at 2900 Crossfork Dr., Apt. 2-C, Wilmington, DE 19808. Their telephone number is 302/994-7847.



Ken Hicks:

The Joke's on Elon

When Ken Hicks attended Elon in the mid-60s, the college probably never considered that it was offering him an education and material for a comedy routine that has earned him the title "The Funniest Person in Virginia."

This spring, Showtime, the national pay-television service, searched the 50 states to find "The Funniest Person in America." Hicks won in Virginia and was one of three finalists for the national title. The contest was held in April on Showtime and voting was done by viewer call-in. Although Hicks didn't win first place, no one holding his side during aperformance would ever think of that.

The mention of sides would probably lead Hicks into some kind of crack about size, leaving the audience wondering just which word is which. There's no possibility, however, of missing Ken Hicks, as William Ruehlmann, columnist for The Virginian-Pilot, describes: "In a three-piece suit, Hicks gives the appearance of a pinstriped galleon under full sail. Bearded and bespectacled, he conveys the girth and grin of Friar Tuck approaching lunch."

As Hicks responds: "Some guys keep Playboy calendars. Want to know my personal favorite pin-up girls? Sara Lee, Betty Crocker and Julia Child."

Though his wit is kind, nothing is safe from the humor of Hicks, not even Elon. "Elon is the Hebrew word for oak. It's also gentile for $3,000 a semester," he quips. While Hicks pulls his figures out of the air, his comedy is generally grounded in real life.

"I'm a comedian who would like to be a humorist. A comic says things funny; a comedian says funny things. A humorist, like Will Rogers, makes you laugh and think."

"The think part is the difference," Hicks explains to Ruehlmann.

Developing the "think" side of Hicks is something his mother quickly recalls. "Oh, yes, I remember his Elon days . . ." she laughed in a phone conversation, giving the distinct impression that there's a lot of history behind that laugh. Yet her laughter is an indication of the good humor and high spirits that run in Ken Hicks' whole family: Cecil and "Buck," Ken's mother and father; his brother, Leonard Ralph Hicks; and his wife, Diana, and 15-year-old daughter, Jennifer.

What is funny to comedian Hicks? "Life is funny. It's the only game I know in which the object is to find out the rules before the end."

Perhaps that "think" side of Ken Hicks gleaned more than his mother imagines.

The Reverend Jerry Schumm '69:

Hitting the Pavement for a Good Cause

On June 4, two Louisiana vans loaded with 14 energetic teenagers and three brave chaper ones arrived to take a look at Elon College. They saw the admissions office slide show, checked the cafeteria fare (which got a high rating), raved over the bookstore, cooled off in the swimming pool, and played with Chaplain Richard McBride's two dogs and seven cats.

The young people were from the First United Church of Baton Rouge, one of the newest, most rapidly growing churches in the United Church of Christ denomination. Chief tour guide and designer of the trip (properly titled "Religious and Historical Seminar '86") was the Reverend Jerry Schumm '69, founder and minister of the new congregation.

The United Church of Christ is a brand new denomination to the Baton Rouge area. Thanks to Schumm's months of "cold calling" (a hot job of door-knocking that took 15 pounds off Schumm in just three months)—the congregation has attracted 202 members, acquired land for a building so they can move out of an elementary school, and sponsored the educational-travel-fun seminar that stopped by Elon.

"I wanted our young people to see some of the work of the UCC—especially the institutions our church founded and supports," Schumm said. The trip included all the sites in Washington, DC., travel through the Shenandoah National Park, play time at Busch Gardens and tours at five UCC colleges.

"Without a doubt Elon stood out far and above any of the other colleges," proud alumnus Schumm wrote in a letter of thanks to President Fred Young. "As a result of our recent visit to Elon, I feel confident that several of our youth will come to visit Elon for four years." Perhaps one of those will be Jamie, the Schumms' 16-year-old daughter. After all, that would make it a family tradition. Schumm's wife is alumna Dr. Jeanne Shay Schumm '69.

Carol Stearns '70

A Decorator on the Move

Carol Wilson Stearns '70 was one of the last graduates from the home economics program at Elon. In 1984 she capitalized on that background and brought to the Florida Panhandle the first franchise of Decorating Den, a mobile decorating service providing everything from drapes to carpeting. With an inventory housed in a company-customized van, she drove her sales into the six-figure category during her initial year as a franchisee. Rolling up those figures further distinguished Stearns with membership in the company's exclusive Century Society.

In two short years, she has acquired two more franchises and has set a long-range goal of ten. She has also taken on a very special partner—her husband, Al.

All the elements in her life—marriage, family and career—seem to be combining quite satisfactorily. There are no special secrets that make the wife-husband team successful. "We just work well together," she said. The Stearns also share a common commitment to the Air Force Reserves. Their two sons, Joshua, 11, and Garth, 8, were born in England during their tours of duty. "My business has flexibility built in," Stearns explained, pointing out that the combination of full-time parenting and working are compatible. "I can schedule appointments with soccer games in mind," she laughed.

As for the career, "my home economics background has come in handy," Stearns said. Textbook and practical experience in textiles and sewing, for example, now enable her to combine style and fabric to come out with just the right look.

Stearns says that Decorating Den is being called "the McDonald's of the decorating business." If its fact the business grows at a McDonald's pace, Stearns might count her success in numbers of customers served.

News in Brief

Fall Enrollment Peaks

Enrollment for the 1986-87 academic year is the largest in Elon's 98-year history, setting a record for the 10th consecutive fall semester. A total of 3,097—2,967 undergraduate and 51 graduate students—are enrolled. Last year's total enrollment was 2,929. Thirty-two states, the District of Columbia, and 13 foreign countries are represented in that total.

First MEd Candidates Enroll

Kenneth L. Harper, director of graduate admissions, reports that there are 51 students enrolled in Elon's new master of education degree program which began for the first time this fall. College officials are pleased with this enrollment figure for Elon's second graduate degree program.

The Martha and Spencer Love School of Business has enrolled 79 full- and part-time students in the master of business administration (MBA) program. The first MBA degrees ever awarded by Elon were conferred last spring.

New Development Staff

Keith F. Harris has been named the new director of development. Harris served as the senior development officer for the Duke Comprehensive Cancer Center for two years and most recently as a consultant to the American College of Radiology in Reston, Virginia.

Dr. Jeri A. Fitzgerald has been named director of foundations and government relations. Fitzgerald served as the director of research, planning and evaluation for the Guilford County School System before taking the Elon position. She has worked as a consultant for the Division of Research and Development for the N.C. Department for Public Instruction.

Students Look at Gender Issues

A "Real Men and Real Women" symposium was held at Elon Sept. 14-18. The symposium brought a variety of speakers to Elon to examine important aspects of male-female relationships. The symposium included a game show and several films to aid students as they listened to discussions on such issues as what it is to be a whole person, men and women in the workplace, and being real in relationships. The symposium was sponsored by the Chaplain's Office and the General Studies Program.

Cates Scholarship Established

Gordon Pannill Hurley Jr. and James Franklin Hurley IV, sons of Gordon and Carolyn Hurley of Salisbury, N.C., have presented the college $50,000 in memory of their grandfather, Zebulon Vance Cates, and their uncle, Philip Vance Cates, a member of Elon's class of 1971. In making the presentation, James Hurley said: "Our grandfather, Vance Cates, instilled in his children a desire for a college education. Our uncle, Phil Cates, brought that desire here to Elon College. He had a deep love for this school."

The endowment fund earnings will provide a competitive scholarship, covering major college expenses, to students for as long as the college exists. Students selected by a college committee to receive the scholarship will be eligible to renew the awards each year until they graduate.

Elon College President Fred Young said the new program will allow Elon to compete with the most prestigious colleges and universities by attracting the most qualified high school students.

"The Zebulon Vance and Philip Vance Cates Scholarship is based on academic ability," Dr. Young noted. "While the college has several programs to assist disadvantaged students, this is the first major scholarship endowment which will provide essentially a free education based entirely on academic ability and leadership characteristics.

President Fred Young conveys the college's appreciation to scholarship donors James and Gordon Hurley

The Hurley family has been active in the Salisbury, N.C., community, where the family owns the Salisbury Post newspaper. Mrs. Hurley was the daughter of Zebulon Vance Cates and the sister of Philip Vance Cates.

Zebulon Vance Cates, grandfather of the young donors, was employed by Melville Dairy for many years prior to his death approximately eight years ago. His widow, Eva Cates, is a UNC graduate and taught in the Elon public schools for several years. She currently resides at Hawfields Presbyterian Home.

Philip Vance Cates graduated from Walter Williams High School in Burlington and transferred to Elon from Gardner-Webb College in 1968. He was a member of Pi Gamma Mu history fraternity and received the A.B. degree in 1971, having made the Dean's List several times. He suffered a heart attack and died while packing to leave a Chicago hospital, where he was being treated for pneumonia. At the time of his death he was the senior buyer for the entire Wickes Lumber Company chain.

Freshman Denese DeJerf: Discovering a Good Fit

By Susan Klopman

The following is the second in our series of articles following Denese Marie DeJerf through her first year at Elon College.

The scene was repeated this fall at college campuses all over the country: cars, trucks, vans—virtually anything with wheels—packed to the hilt, delivering the Class of 1990 to colleges everywhere.

It took both parents and two vehicles to transport freshman Denese DeJerf from her home in Arlington, Virginia, to Elon College. What took quite a while to pack took even longer to unpack and haul.

"I took one look at my room and thought 'no way,' " DeJerf says. "I knew we'd never get all my stuff in."

That typical first impression, however, was followed by a typical outcome—the dorm room is now attractively decorated in soft pinks with a place for everything and everything in its place. "It's hard to believe we did it," she laughs.

This "we" includes not her parents, but her roommate, Maria Donio, from Indian Mills, N.J. "I didn't know what it would be like to live with a stranger, but we get along great," DeJerf says with genuine enthusiasm. "We are so much alike. We listen to the same music; we dress alike, except Maria wears jams; we like the same kind of friends—we even find the same faults in them!"

By the end of the first day the roommates had managed to find time to compare notes on everything from boys to when they like to study. "It was really a hectic time, though," DeJerf says. "I was pooped after trying to move in, meet people and attend all those meetings in one day."

Indeed August 31 was the beginning of a very busy orientation period—meeting faculty advisors, finalizing schedules, reviewing the handbook and so on. Included in the schedule was a series of workshops on the Myers-Briggs Type Indicator (MBTI), a highly regarded method of identifying certain temperament or personality types. For the first time, all freshmen were required to complete the MBTI in an attempt to provide the student with increased self-awareness and a better understanding of how people interact.

"We met in small groups," DeJerf says. "The instructor explained what the different types are and then we guessed what our own type is. We had to guess our roommate's too. After we were given our own results, we formed new groups with people of our same type and talked about how we would react to certain situations.

"It (the MBTI) certainly pegged me correctly," she says, adding that Maria had the same experience. While DeJerf acknowledged that the MBTI's assessment concurred with her own self-understanding,

November 4 Vote Critical To Elon College's Future

"What can I do for Elon College?"

"You can vote for Constitutional Amendment # 1 on the November 4 North Carolina general election ballot," says President Fred Young.

"This really is the single most important thing that alumni and friends of Elon living in North Carolina can do this fall to help us prepare for the future," the college president said.

"Passage of this amendment will allow us to make needed improvements and build new facilities at much lower cost, which will help us keep our tuition and fees as low as possible."

Constitutional Amendment # 1 will permit Elon and the state's other 37 independent colleges and universities to fund capital improvements through tax-exempt financing. The key words are "tax-exempt." Bond buyers are willing to earn lower interest rates if they do not have to pay taxes on the interest. As a result, the colleges will be able to fund construction projects at lower interest rates—and at a lower total cost—than are currently available to them.

"Elon College can save a considerable amount of money—several million dollars—over the next several years if this amendment is approved," adds Young. "Without it, we will be unable to move forward with many of our most critical needs."

For instance, Young said, the college could finance construction of the new $7.5 million fine arts center and repay the debt as pledges to the campaign are fulfilled. The college could also finance projects, such as the new telephone or cable television systems as short-term cash flow needs arise. Remodeling projects could also be financed through bond sales.

"I want to make it clear that these tax-exempt bonds will be repaid fully by the colleges and universities who use them," Young said. "We're not asking for a free ride. All we want is the authority to pay for the facilities we need in the least expensive way possible. At no point will the state or its taxpayers be asked to pay for these bonds.

"In fact, we can say categorically that Constitutional Amendment # 1 will not cost the taxpayer a cent, ever. Even the administrative cost of operating the program will be paid by the institution benefiting from the financing."

The president pointed out that public colleges and universities, nonprofit hospitals and other organizations have been able to finance projects through the sale of tax-free bonds for years.

Passage of the amendment is being promoted by North Carolina Friends of Higher Education, a nonprofit organization chaired by Jacob C. Martinson Jr. of High Point College. State leaders serving as honorary chairpersons include: Governor Jim Martin, Lt. Governor Bob Jordan, House Speaker Liston Ramsey, State Treasurer Harlan Boyles, U.S. Senate candidates Terry Sanford and Sen. Jim Broyhill, Charlotte Mayor Harvey Gantt and state women's leader Margaret Harper. BB&T President and CEO L. Vincent Lowe of Wilson is treasurer.

"Constitutional Amendment # 1 is clearly important to the future of this state, not just its independent colleges and universities," says NCFHE Chairman Martinson. "We feel that once the voters understand how it will aid our independent schools and higher education in general, and that it won't cost them anything, it will be overwhelmingly approved."

"The outcome of the election will largely depend on a strong alumni turnout at the polls," Dr. Young adds. "Elon College again needs your support. We need your vote FOR Constitutional Amendment # 1 on November 4. And if you aren't a resident of North Carolina, you can help by telling family and friends about Amendment # 1 and its importance to Elon College.

she remains somewhat suspicious. "It's a little too pat," she notes. "I think it 'defines' you too much and doesn't leave enough room for change."

After the first couple of weeks, it was clear that there are two things DeJerf does not want to change: her roommate and her professors. DeJerf has high marks for Elon's faculty.

"I have great classes," she says. "I really love Ms. Euliss's English class. One of the first assignments we had was to write down the high points and the low points in our life, and then she surprised us by telling us to write a paper about them. I thought that was a very interesting assignment—not easy, but interesting."

Because DeJerf wants to pursue a career in photojournalism, her advisor is Dr. Bob Nowell, assistant professor of communications and advisor to the student newspaper, The Pendulum. "I'm doing some sports photography for the paper," she says, pleased that she is already getting experience in her chosen field.

How have the realities of college life measured up to her expectations? "It really is almost exactly what I expected," she says. "Maybe the classes are a little harder, and getting to know people isn't as instantaneous as I expected, but I love it here," she says, although she did not hesitate to add: "I miss my boyfriend." And what about missing her parents? "Not really," she says. "We talk on the phone almost everyday!"

Leslie J. Carter '76

Leslie Carter has successfully taken her B.A.-degree in English into the world of sales and customer relations for Engineered Systems of Greensboro, N.C. Owned by Telecom, the firm markets security systems for industrial and commercial businesses. Carter joined the company in 1978. She is a member of the prestigious President's Club as a result of her top sales award in 1985. She has continued to win the quarterly sales award consecutively since August 1985.

Carter enjoys photography and darkroom work. Jogging is another interest, but she lists "life" as her passion!

A main event each year is the Carter-Laurie Hafner '76 reunion. Hafner is a UCC minister in Cleveland, Ohio, and despite the distance, these college buddies have remained as close as ever.

Carter is at home at 1115 A West Bessemer Avenue, Greensboro, NC 27408.

Elizabeth Berry Pinson '83

Beth Pinson studied human relations for several years before leaving to marry Elon grad John H. Pinson '85. At the time of her marriage, Pinson began working for Living Well Fitness Centers. Her career has moved at a very fast pace. She is now in upper level management, and during the last 3 ½ years she has been transferred several times to open new centers.

Pinson enjoys skiing—whatever the season, on water or on snow. She is also a Sunday school teacher at Salem Presbyterian Church in Salem, Virginia, where she and John moved recently.

The Pinsons' address is: 5401 Warwood Drive, Salem, VA 24153.

John Hudson Pinson '85

A nice part of finding Beth Pinson was being able to catch up with John Pinson. He is the director of safety services with the Red Cross in Roanoke, Virginia, and he is a certified first aid and CPR instructor as well. During his free time, he teaches tennis for the city of Salem, Va.

Pinson is as interested in fitness as his wife. He adds weightlifting as part of his routine. He enjoys football and follows Elon's team closely. There's some coaching in his blood, too—he works with adult softball and football teams. He enjoys his wife's enthusiasm for skiing, especially water skiing with their boat on Smith Mountain Lake.

Celebrating the Good Life

A 92nd birthday—what a noteworthy occasion! It seems like a perfect time to do nothing more than sit back, recall our laurels and just remember when...

Not so for H.B. Marley Sr., who celebrated his 92nd birthday on May 18, 1986. Instead of living in the private world of memories, he decided to round up fellow classmates and correspond with them. Consequently, he wrote the alumni office requesting all the names of the active members of the Class of 1920 (There are 11, by the way). Included in his letter was a brief biography, and while he's looking ahead to another productive year, we decided to look back and capture a glimpse of his past.

Recalling his Elon days, pre-World War I, Marley remembered a special Japanese friend, Toshi Sito. "The Japanese were persecuting Christians then," he said. "She didn't have the money to go home and she was afraid. But she was worried about her family, so we took up a collection to pay her way."

World War I brought changes to Marley's life too. Service in the Navy replaced studying at Elon. Marley served as a pharmacist mate third. His first assignment was recruitment training in Newport, Rhode Island. Memories of that time center around one special date with a very famous lady—Gloria Vanderbilt. "She was not the prettiest girl I ever dated," he said, "but she sure was the richest."

The next assignment took him to the Naval Hospital at Pelham Bay Park, N.Y., where Marley was in the first group to test the original flu vaccine.

Later tours took him aboard the USS Siboney and to other Naval hospitals in Hampton Roads, Virginia, and Brooklyn, N.Y. He ended his Naval career at the hospital at Charleston, S.C., where he was discharged in the general demobilization following World War I.

With the war days over, Marley went to work for R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company. He was a district manager both in Washington, D.C., and Cumberland, Maryland. The Maryland memories include another special date with a pretty young woman, Irma Lee Mars, who was a student at the Church Home Nursing School affiliated with John Hopkins University. She became Mrs. H. B. Marley.

After over 22 years with Reynolds, Marley went to work for the Springfield Tire Company. His 20-plus years there included being district manager for eight states and the District of Columbia.

With more than 42 years of his life invested in American industry, Marley formerly retired, but he did not stop working. He devoted the next 12 years to Goodwill Industries.

Now heading for birthday number 93, Marley says, "I'm very fortunate that I've never been sick a day in my life. I've had a very nice life, too." Perhaps that says it all.

Marley is at home at 5611 Kapp Road, Hidden Valley, Pfafftown, NC 27040

Jon F. White II '72
Big Times for High Tech

Thinking big is part of the heritage of Jon White '72. His dad—Dr. Jack O. White, retired professor of music and well-known jazzman—has never thought any other way. The example has proved worthwhile.

White is the founder and president of Microflex, a small Winston-Salem, NC-based micro electronics and software development company. His firm specializes in software for the transportation and convenience store/service station industries. White started Microflex with a staff of four in late 1983. Believing that no client is too small for expert, personal attention, this small group (now with a staff of 35) has attracted the attention of a big company—Rockwell International.

For several years Microflex has been preparing the software package for Automotive Electronics, Rockwell's international automotive operation. Now Microflex will provide a broad variety of custom software programs for the customers of Rockwell's Tripmaster trip recording system. Tripmaster is a special onboard vehicle recorder system which monitors such things as a truck's stop times, idle times, excessive speeding and fuel consumption. Its overall purpose is to enhance a fleet operator's ability to manage his road equipment and drivers efficiently.

How not only will little Microflex have a big name, but "it will give us a chance to show the world that there are exciting things going on in North Carolina's high-tech industries," White said.

Another part of White's heritage is the horn. He received a music scholarship at Elon, and he played the trumpet for the Emanons. But when it came time to select a major, he chose math and physics—obviously a good choice because he attained membership in Alpha Chi Honorary Society. After graduation, White attended VPI in Blacksburg, Va., and received a master's degree in mathematical physics, specializing in the relativity theory. Next stop—the Navy, doing research on subs for the Naval Ship Research and Development Center. That was the job that made the connection between computer technology and vehicle performance.

So while the horn has been relegated to hobby status, White does practice something else he attributes to his father—yelling! "Yelling is a real stress reliever for me, especially in this business," White said. "I also get my drive and high energy from my father." High energy for high tech—definitely a productive connection for Jon White.

White and his wife, the former Cheryl Turner of Alamance County, live in Winston-Salem, NC. They have three children: Ashley, age 9; Josh, 2; and Michael, 1.

For Barry '80 andTianna Ratliff

A Bundle of Joy—Times Four

It's a girl... It's a boy... It's another girl... and another boy! That's exactly the way it went on May 13, 1986, as Barry '80 and Tianna Ratliff became the proud parents of quadruplets. The new Ratliffs, in order of appearance, are: Sara Bethany, weighing in at 3 lbs., 9 ozs.; Daniel Seth, 3 lbs., 8 ozs.; Magan Tiana, 3 lbs., 11 ozs.; and Joshua Barry, 2 lbs., 15 ozs.

"We never realized what it would be like," Tiana laughed. "We were just so grateful that we were going to have a family that we really didn't worry about what it would mean to have four babies at one time."

Obviously it means you need four of everything and you do everything four times, and there's no such thing as too much help! "The community has been wonderful," Tiana said. They live in Rock Hill, S.C., not far from Charlotte, NC. Stores in both areas have given the Ratliffs cribs, high chairs--"Everything," Tiana added. "We didn't have to buy a thing."

A year's supply of baby food and formula were provided by the manufacturers. Thank heavens the diaper company provided coupons instead of a year's-worth of boxed diapers! Even at that, space has become a critical need.

"We're looking for a new house," she added. "We live in a two-bedroom, one bath house, and we just don't fit."

Another major change involved Ratliff's work. He and his father were in the independent telephone business in Rock Hill, SC. His position involved travel, and that just wasn't possible with four babies. After all, four babies need at least four hands. Ratliff now works for the Fort Mill, SC., telephone company and is home each night.

Nobody knows better than Tiana that necessity is the mother of invention. She has devised all kinds of helping aids—the propped-bottle feeding method being the most useful. How else can you feed four at once! Or take bath time—an ingenious assembly line of water, wiggling babies, towels and tiny clothes.

Grandparents fill in a lot of the gaps. Luckily they live nearby and help with everything from babysitting to washing the daily load of clothes.

For the Ratliffs, though, there is no question that the joys far outweight the frustrations. Each day brings something new. "Now they have started laughing and gurgling," Tiana says, "and that's wonderful. It's just such a joy to have children!"—especially times four.

To our knowledge, these are the first Little Christian quadruplets. If we're mistaken, we'd appreciate being corrected.

ELON COLLEGE

A Year of Building and Becoming

The President's Report

In reporting to you on the 1985-86 year at Elon College, the words "Building and Becoming" come to mind. This phrase was the title of a booklet produced at Elon during the past year, and it aptly describes the tenor of activity on the campus.

In 1985-86, as in previous years, Elon sought to remain responsive to the needs of its students yet true to its traditions. New projects, plans, programs, and proposals flourished against the background of a daily fulfillment of the college's time-honored mission.

In short, Elon was building on its past in order to become an institution of the future—and the result was a very successful year.

There is no better evidence of this success than the giving records for the past year. Over 45% of all Elon alumni made a gift to the college last year, a statistic that places Elon at the top of all coeducational colleges in North Carolina—ahead of such institutions as Duke and Wake Forest—and among the top of all colleges and universities in the Southeast. This is a record of which all can be proud.

Elon is building on its past in order to become an an institution of the future

Total private giving last year reached $2.3 million, the second year in a row above $2 million. The Annual Fund raised over $420,000 in support of general operating expenses. This year's goal is to reach the $500,000 mark—an ambitious effort, but a realistic one in light of the level of commitment of Elon alumni, parents, and friends, and a necessary one if the college is to continue to increase the quality of its service.

Academic Program Advances

The creation of The Martha and Spencer Love School of Business at Elon was a high point of the 1985-86 academic year. The naming of the school was made possible by a $1 million gift from The Martha and Spencer Love Foundation.

Income from the endowment will fund professorships, opportunities for faculty development and enrichment, visiting lectureships and additional library holdings. In short, it will enable a new level of quality and prestige for the business programs at Elon, both undergraduate and graduate.

Sixty students were enrolled in the MBA program last year and the first five MBA degrees were awarded during the 1986 Commencement exercises.

Also during 1985-86 the college received approval to offer a second graduate program, leading to the master of education degree (M.Ed.). The M.Ed. grows out of a tradition of excellent teacher preparation programs at Elon. Two of the past five North Carolina Teachers of the Year have been Elon graduates, Linda Benson Lee '65 and Donna Hill Oliver '72.

Dr. John G. Sullivan Jr., one of Elon's most distinguished teacher-scholars, was named Maude Sharpe Powell Professor at Elon during the past year; Dr. J. Earl Danieley holds the Thomas E. Powell Jr. Professorship. Endowed professorships, which enabled the college to attract and retain superior faculty, are invaluable if Elon is to continue providing higher levels of service.

The first group of Elon students spent the fall semester studying in England last year, with great success. The group lived in London, studied under the British and American professors and used the University of London library facilities. The semester-abroad program is a fine addition to the many opportunities for cultural and intellectual enrichment offered to Elon students.

Another distinction for Elon during the past year was Dr. Andrew J. Angyal's selection for a Fulbright Senior Lectureship. Dr. Angyal's appointment was the first in Elon history. He spent the spring semester teaching and lecturing at the University of Debrecen in Hungary.

The ability—and the desire—to understand issues and weigh various viewpoints is one of the most valuable ends of an education. The Elon cultural and intellectual programs are geared toward that goal, and each year's offerings are increasingly impressive.

Politics and social issues were themes for last year's events. The students had an opportunity to hear and to meet three of our country's foremost statesmen—former President Gerald R. Ford, Senator William Proxmire, and former Representative Shirley Chisholm. All were invited by student groups. Two symposia during the year focused on conditions in South Africa and Central America. Each featured speakers representing a variety of viewpoints.

Fine Arts Center Takes Shape

Elon's long-awaited fine arts center, now under construction beside Lake Mary Nell, is almost as large in size and scope as our dreams of the use of that facility. Construction of the $7.5 million, 75,000 square-foot building began in September 1985, and it should be ready for occupancy for the 1987-88 year. The center contains an auditorium, recital hall, rehearsal hall, and theatre, as well as classroom and office space.

Admissions—Continuing Success

Elon recorded its eighth straight enrollment increase in 1985-86, despite the fact that requirements for admission were raised for the second year in a row. A total of 2929 students registered for classes in the fall of 1985, up from 2794 the previous year.

Last year's student body contained a higher number of out-of-state students than ever before. Slightly over one-half of the full-time-equivalent students were from outside North Carolina. This situation is part of a growing trend among many private North Carolina colleges that emphasizes the need for narrowing the gap in the cost of tuition at the state's public and private institutions.

Tightening the admissions standards during a time when the high school population is decreasing has been an ambitious undertaking, but interest in Elon continues to grow. The number of applications received last year was 25 percent greater than the year before, and the average SAT score for entering freshmen continued to climb.

Our success in meeting and overreaching the admissions goals each year is a tribute to the overall quality of the college program. Our success in maintaining and improving upon that quality is a tribute to the loyalty and generosity of Elon alumni, parents, and friends.

It is our pleasure to list all Elon donors in the annual Honor Roll issue of The Magazine of Elon. We sincerely appreciate every gift and every expression of interest represented by the names on these pages. Each one is vital if Elon is to continue the process of building and becoming.

Elon Alumni Among the Top in the Southeast

A record 46.2 percent of all Elon alumni gave to the Annual Fund during the 1985-86 fiscal year, sending the year-end total to $422,000—$72,000 above the $350,000 Annual Fund goal.

Such outstanding participation enabled Elon alumni not only to hold firm to their ranking as number one in alumni participation among all coed colleges and universities in North Carolina, but also to move into the top ranking in the Southeast.

"Once again Elon alumni have responded to the challenge of being one of the best—this time on a regional basis—and we're very proud of their support," Said Frances Stanley, coordinator of alumni giving.

The Golden Alumni held strong with 50.5 percent participation. This elite group includes all those alumni who are members of the Class of '35 or earlier. With 70 percent participation, the class of 1927 edged out the Class of '37, the winner of last year's top honors.

This year three classes—1957, 1964, 1974—were chosen for special attention in a pilot project aimed at challenging the giving record of the Classes of '37. Each class increased its participation this year, thanks to the cooperation of class presidents Donald B. Johnson '57, Dr. Wayne Pruitt '64 and Nathanial W. Harrison Jr. '74.

In a class-by-class participation comparison, 26 classes gave above the 50 percent level with the Class of '67 being the most recent to pass that mark. Six classes—'24, '25, '27, '29, '34, and '37—had an impressive 60 percent or better participation figure. Other standouts among the classes are the Class of '76 with the most significant percentage increase of donors, rising from 28 to 42 percent participation, and the Class of '77 which set a four-year record of increasing participation from 4 to 47 percent.

Dollars and alumni participation were not the only totals that reflect increases for the year. So does the number of new donors. Out of the 5,035 donors making gifts to the college, 1,169 of those were new, setting a record increase in new donors for the fourth year in a row. In addition to that, 35 percent of the donors increased the amount of their gifts over last year's donation. donation.

Parents and friends of Elon made a strong showing this year too. Fifty percent of the parents of full-time, traditional students made gifts, representing a 100 percent increase in participation over last year. The giving record for friends also showed increases. There were 357 new donors and the amount given increased by 58 percent.

Corporate donors added one more significant increase to the Annual Fund report. Support from that sector increased by 57 percent over last year.

In reviewing the annual giving year, Zachary (Zac) T. Walker III '60, 1985-86 Annual Fund chairman, stated: "This has been an excellent giving year for Elon College. Alumni have continued to exceed their past records and have put Elon out front once again in the state and now in the Southeast. I'm very proud of Elon's alumni, parents and friends for their continued support of the college."

Kappa Sigma Wins Second Annual Greek Contest; Phi Mu Is Top Sorority

Kappa Sigma Fraternity has earned the Greater Greek Annual Alumni Participation Award with a record 55.3 percent of their former brothers making a donation to the Elon College Annual Fund. The award, which is given annually to the fraternity or sorority with the highest percentage alumni making gifts to the Annual Fund, will be presented to the fraternity by President J. Fred Young at a special ceremony this fall. Kappa Sigma's 1986 totals reflect a five percent increase over 1985 figures and a remarkable 28 percent increase over 1984.

Among fraternities, Kappa Alpha/Kappa Psi Nu was close on the heels of Kappa Sigma with a 55.2 percent giving record. That represents over a 15 percent increase in the last two years.

Although not eligible for the award, the old Iota Tau Kappa Fraternity once again turned in the best performance overall with 59.4 percent of their alumni members making contributions.

Phi Mu Sorority had a strong showing with 53.8 percent participation, making them number one among the sororities. Sigma Sigma Sigma sisters came in second with 50 percent participation. Not far behind were Alpha Sigma Alpha at 49 percent and at 46.9 percent, Zeta Tau Alpha, last year's winner of the Greater Greek Award.

The Greeks have had an active year with over 50 percent of the total 1,913 enrolled alumni members participating in the Annual Fund efforts, according to Frances Stanley, coordinator of alumni giving. "Their support is terrific," she noted. "The Greeks continue to make a significant impact on the Annual Fund totals."

GIVING CLUBS

Special recognition is given to Elon College donors who make significant gifts for the General Fund, academic scholarships and awards, academic program support, endowment, and capital projects. Membership in the ORDER OF THE OAK is awarded to alumni and friends who have contributed $100,000 to Elon through the ELON LIFE FOR ENDOWMENT program. The CHAIRMAN'S COUNCIL honors donors who gave $5,000 or more. Membership in the PRESIDENT'S CLUB is extended to those individuals who contribute $1000-$4999. A contribution of $500-$999 entitles donors to membership in the OAK CLUB. The L. L. HOOK CLUB membership consists of those who have contributed $100-$499. The amount of an individual's gift for all eligible purposes during the fiscal year ending May 31, 1986 determines the qualifications for giving club membership.

VOTE FOR CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT #1 FOR HIGHER EDUCATION

VOTE ✓ FOR

Elon College

North Carolina's proposed constitutional amendment #1 will allow Elon to sell tax-exempt bonds to finance construction of new facilities, improvements to facilities and purchase of equipment. The savings in interest paid on bonds by Elon in the future will be substantial.

VOTE ✓ FOR

Independent Colleges & Universities

Future students at Elon and 37 other independent colleges and universities in North Carolina will benefit from this constitutional amendment. Tax-exempt bonds will allow these schools to hold down costs to students, while making needed improvements to their facilities.

VOTE ✓ FOR

The Future of North Carolina

North Carolina's independent colleges and universities play a key role in the state's economy and the quality of life we enjoy. Passage of the constitutional amendment will help ensure that these important institutions of higher education will continue to be a vital part of North Carolina's future.

News in Brief

Astin Calls For New Standards

In a speech on the Elon campus, Alexander W. Astin, professor of higher education and director of the Higher Education Research Institute at UCLA, called for new standards for rating a college's excellence. Instead of reputation and resources, "the critical issue is what an institution does for its students," he noted.

Job Fair, Fashion Show Prepare Seniors

One hundred Elon students held 150 interviews with local and national companies at the largest job fair in the state held at Wake Forest University. Karen Thompson, Elon's director of placement, chaired the event. Back on campus, Thompson directed "Dress for Success," a career-styled fashion show using student models. In October the placement office co-sponsored a national video teleconference entitled "Get That Job! Success in Employment Interviewing."

Roberts Speaks at Religious Forum

Dr. Nanette Roberts, secretary for public issues in education for the United Church Board for Homeland Ministries of the United Church of Christ, spoke at the Fall Religious Forum. Her topic for the two-day event was "Faith Journeys Toward the Twenty-first Century." Events included dialogues with students, a faculty luncheon and an evening worship service.

New Sorority Chartered

Alpha Omicron Pi has begun its third North Carolina chapter at Elon, and 43 women have joined as charter members. National and regional representatives, on campus to select the new colony members, noted that Elon was chosen because of its growth pattern and strong Greek system.

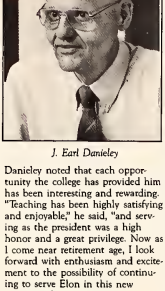
Danieley Accepts New Post at Elon

Dr. J. Earl Danieley, Thomas E. Powell Jr. Professor and former president of the college, has accepted the position of Elon's Director of Planned Giving, effective January 1, 1987. He succeeds Dr. Frank Proffitt, who will retire at that time. Dr. Danieley will continue as a member of the Department of Chemistry with a reduced teaching load to allow time for his new duties.

"Dr. Danieley retires from full-time teaching as he retired from the presidency—at the peak of success," said Dr. Fred Young, president of the college, in making the announcement. "However, because of the importance of the planned giving position and his unique qualifications for it, his most significant contributions to Elon College may well lie ahead."

In response to his new position,



J. Earl Danieley

Danieley noted that each opportunity the college has provided him has been interesting and rewarding. "Teaching has been highly satisfying and enjoyable," he said, "and serving as the president was a high honor and a great privilege. Now as I come near retirement age, I look forward with enthusiasm and excitement to the possibility of continuing to serve Elon in this new capacity."

Thompson Courtyard Named

The courtyard surrounded by Chandler, Colclough and Maynard residence halls has been named in honor of Elon alumnus and trustee A.G. Thompson '41 and his wife, Rachel. A brass plaque was unveiled during ceremonies held at the courtyard in October. More than 200 students and faculty were on hand for the event.

President Fred Young spoke of the significance of the court, noting that it is more than a beautiful spot on the Elon campus. "This is a place where plans are made for the future, where dreams originate, where academic ideas grow, and where romance is sure to spark," he said.

Thompson, retired senior vice president of NCNB in Lincolnton, N.C., provided the resources to make the court possible.

Board Hears From Several Committees

The Elon College Board of Trustees heard and discussed a wide range of topics at its annual fall meeting, Wednesday, October 22, according to President Fred Young.

"It was basically an information session," said Young. "No action was called for on most of the issues, but it was still a productive meeting."

The board heard that the Fine Arts Center is progressing on schedule, with completion slated for late spring, 1987. In the mini-campaign to raise additional funds for the center, $1 million has been pledged toward the $1.5 million goal.

The board reviewed the campus housing situation and discussed the matter of institutional size at length, said Young. They considered several options for upgrading a number of unsatisfactory residence hall spaces, including seeking an arrangement with a commercial developer. The members deemed it "difficult, if not impossible," said Young, to have any additional spaces available by the 1987 opening of school and did not take any action.

The board heard a report on the reorganization of the Elon Office of Development. The fund-raising staff of the office will now report directly to the director of development, and the vice president will concentrate on securing major gifts. Fund-raising staff members will be assigned responsibility for various geographic regions.

Paul C. Purdy, a 1986 graduate of the college, was elected youth trustee and Warren Board was elected assistant secretary and assistant treasurer of the board.

Twenty Named to Who's Who

The 1987 edition of Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges will include 20 of Elon's outstanding campus leaders. Selection for the honor is based on academic achievement, service to the community, leadership in extra-curricular activities and potential for continued success.

FOOTNOTES

The following letter was received recently from Dr. and Mrs. Hans Hirsch. They were members of the faculty during the 1940s. He taught history, and she taught French and German. The Hirsche' address is 267 Cornelia Street, Plattsburg, NY 12901.—Editor's Note

October 13, 1986

Dear Dr. Williams,

Although a full year has passed since we received your good letter confirming our annual—atlas small—contribution to dear "ole Elon"! As you reminded us in your message, it was the 7th consecutive year of our membership in the A.L. Hook Club, and I am sending you this note to enclose our eighth check for the Club, addressed to the Office of Development.

We are delighted and excited about the series of wonderful news simply "streaming out" of Elon (which we receive in the various newspapers you so kindly send us) and we marvel at your successes, both spiritually and financially. May it so continue and the institution keep on to flourish! It is always in our prayers!

Please convey our very best greetings and wishes to Earl (Danieley) and to President Young. Our year, I am grateful to say, has been a good one, filled with responsibilities and many pleasant experiences. With our kindest personal regards to you, hoping that you are well, in which, of course, Mrs. Hirsch joins me, I am, as ever,

Sincerely,

Hans E. Hirsch

A native of Alamance County and a graduate of Elon College, Dr. Danieley also holds a master's degree and a Ph.D. in organic chemistry from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He has been a member of the Elon College faculty since 1946 and served as president from 1957 until 1973, when he resigned to return to teaching. In 1983, he was named Thomas E. Powell Jr. Professor. His accomplishments in the field of chemical education are nationally recognized.

Dr. Danieley has long been a leader in state and civic, church and educational affairs. He was appointed to state commissions by four N.C. governors. He is a former member of the Board of Trustees of East Carolina University and currently serves on the Board of Governors of the University of North Carolina.

Dr. Danieley is a member and former president of the Burlington Rotary Club and a former member of the Board of Trustees of Alamance County Hospital. A former Alamance County commissioner, he is a lifelong Republican and has served twice as secretary and once as parliamentarian of the state Republican Party.

A member of the Elon College Community Church (United Church of Christ), Dr. Danieley has been a deacon in that church since 1949 and has served as chairman of the board and moderator of the church five times. He has also held a number of denominational positions, including serving four years as the national chairman of the Council for Lay Life and Work.

Dr. Danieley has received Citizen of the Year awards from the Civitan and Kiwanis clubs. He has also been awarded honorary degrees from Catawba College and Campbell University.

day series in late October. Alumni visits will be held on a departmental basis at different times during the year. Graduates Alton "Buddy" Skinner '66 with the N.C. Department of Commerce and Josh Stone '86 with Wachovia Bank began the series by speaking to classes in the economics department.

Hall of Fame Adds Five

Five outstanding athletes were inducted into Elon's Sports Hall of Fame at a special ceremony on October 18. New inductees are baseball's Lefty Taylor and Johnny Clayton, football stand-outs Joe West and Don McLaughlin, and former women's basketball coach—now of national fame—Kay Yow. Yow is the first woman ever to be inducted in Elon's Hall of Fame.

Johnny Clayton

A native of Hillsborough when it was Hillsboro, Clayton played baseball at Elon before and after World War II before joining the pro ranks, where he played for the Burlington Bees at the old Elon baseball park.

A shortstop, Clayton lettered in 1940, 1941, 1946 and 1947, and he was the leading batter on the Elon squad in 1941 with a .381 batting average.

Clayton, who has lived in Burlington since his college days, had a career batting average of .341 and was on the 1947 All-Conference team. He ranks second in all-time doubles at Elon with 20 his senior year; he is third in season hits with 91 his senior year.

Clayton was a valued member of the 1941 team that set (and still holds) the conference and NAIA record for percentage of victories, .952. The Fightin' Christians won 20 games and lost only one that year.

Clayton played under three coaches at Elon, Horace Hendrickson, Jet Pierce and Jim Mallory.

Clayton also played basketball and lettered four years as a guard. He scored 447 points for a 4.8 average. He was named MVP on the team in 1947 and captained the 1948 team.

Lefty Taylor

Taylor, living in Thomasville, Ga., lettered in baseball under coach Jim Mallory in the 1949, 1950 and 1951 seasons and is one of Elon's all-time great southpaw pitchers.

He posted an aggregate record of 16 wins, four losses and struck out 151 batters while walking 82. Taylor pitched one 2-hitter, two 3-hitters, three 4-hitters.

His most recalled victory was a 16-inning triumph over East Carolina when he went the route

PASSPORT TO EXPERIENCE

Life in London

Learning to Live With Pubs, Pence and Pork Pies

By Nan Perkins

For 35 Elon College students, life has suddenly changed. They haven't been in a car since August. They don't own a phone and their mail takes a week to reach them. They haven't seen their parents or sweethearts in months, and they don't have any idea what's happening on "The Guiding Light." They don't walk to class anymore or meet their friends at the library, grill or frat house. And the backdrop for their everyday lives is not the steady blast of rock music coming from every stereo, radio and TV; it is the bustle and hum of one of the world's largest and most exciting cities—London, England.

Are they miserable? Far from it. "I love it!" exclaims Babette Almquist of Barrington, Rhode Island, and her comment expresses the unanimous opinion of Elon's second group of students to spend the fall semester in London. Last year 19 students inaugurated the college's semester abroad program with Professor Will Migniuolo as faculty leader. Word quickly spread, and this year 35 students are in London with Dr. Lamar Bland of the English department and his family.

Students in the program live in flats in the Paddington and Bayswater areas of London. They take their courses at facilities rented from the University of London, where they also have library and student union privileges, and they study under professors hired from various London colleges and universities. One of the courses is taught by Dr. Bland.

This year's students have a choice of six courses in the fields of fine arts, history, literature, theater, economics and political science. All of the courses except one, International Economy, focus on the British culture. Classes are taught Monday through Thursday, leaving an extra day for weekend trips. A ten-day fall break allows time for additional travel.

Since their initial orientation period, the students have been basically on their own. According to Dr. William G. Rich, Elon's director of study abroad programs, building independence is one of the goals of the program. The faculty leader is available to the students and sees them at least once a week but does not supervise them on a daily basis.

Life in London vs. life in Elon College is, of course, a study in contrasts. For the students, the routines of a small college campus fade as quickly as their jeans do in Clorox.

Money presents the most immediate challenge. If not purchased in the states, English pounds must be bought the minute one steps off the plane. And what are all those coins that weigh the purse or pocket so? Is a two shilling piece the same as 10 pence? Can that huge coin really be worth only 2p? And most difficult to understand, how can $100 buy only 66 pounds?

The language one might expect to be the same. But not quite. Some Southern U.S. pronunciations are foreign to the English ear and some English words are not what they seem. The Underground, for example, is NOT a subway—that's something else entirely. And the menu contains some strange designations: Plaice? Prawns? Courgettes?

Food, in fact, may require the students' biggest adjustment. In London's thousands of bakeries, patisseries and cafes, the shelves are filled with delectable-looking scones, tarts, pastries and pies. Fresh rolls bulge with ham, cheese, chopped egg, cucumbers, lettuce and cress. "Ploughman's" plates stand ready—roll, cheese, fruit and chopped pickle. Everything looks mouth-wateringly delicious and everything tastes—bad.

The Elon students, however, have found ways to adapt. McDonald's and Wendy's—or the English substitute Wimpy's—are readily available, but more often than not they take their weekly food allowance, visit the abundant corner markets and fruit stands, and cook in. They also adopt the best of London culinary fare—hot tea, tasty cheeses and crackers, and Toblerone chocolates. And in the place of England's tepid canned soft drinks, they've been known to resort to a ha'pint of lager or ale.

Travel presents the greatest opportunity—and the greatest challenge. The automobile, the most ubiquitous symbol of American life, is not an option. It is replaced by the Underground or "tube," the bus and the train. Students no longer buy gas, they buy tickets and passes. They consult train schedules, learn bus

Study in Spain

Another Inter-Cultural Opportunity Increases in Popularity

By Yvonne Evans '87

Last summer for the first time, Elon sponsored a 4-week study abroad program to Spain. From July 1 through July 31, seven Elon students and one faculty coordinator, Dr. Ernest Lunsford, toured the country and took courses to broaden their perspectives of life in Spain.

Students were enrolled at the University of Salamanca, Spain's oldest and most prestigious university. In the summer the university holds special classes to teach Spanish to foreigners, and this past summer, total enrollment was around 1,500. Many countries were represented, but American and western European students predominated.

Students took a placement test when they arrived and were placed accordingly at the appropriate beginner, intermediate or advanced level.

Classes were held four hours per day, Monday through Friday. All instruction was in Spanish and the students seemed to like their professor very much.

Participants were housed in individual private homes with Spanish-speaking families. This provided an opportunity for students to improve their speaking and understanding of the language. Relations between students and their "families" varied from close and family-like to a more business-like boarding-house atmosphere, but they all unanimously agreed that they learned as much or more about Spanish by living with a family as they had learned in the classroom.

The university provided a broad range of optional activities for students at a nominal additional cost. Seven concerts and theater productions were offered, including two Spanish plays performed by a group from Madrid. Movies, choral concerts, contemporary dance and guitar concerts were also available to the students. Guided walking tours of Salamanca and one-day bus tours were also offered.

Because of the program's success and popularity, Elon will offer its first Winter Term in Spain in January 1987.

BLESSED ARE THE PEACEMAKERS

For Jeff and Ruth Pugh, a ten-day stint in a Bolivian mission meant hard work and a dramatic escape.

By Susan Klopman

I feel North America and South America, from a spiritual perspective, are so intimately connected to one another that if we are to understand the Word of God in North America we have to know how the Word of God works in Latin America.
—Henri J. M. Nouwen

It isn't easy to get to Bolivia. Nor can it be done in a hurry. For Jeff Pugh, assistant professor of religion and United Methodist minister, and his wife, Ruth, secretary for the fine arts department, it took two long, exhausting days, six plane flights and a final trip through the jungle at night in the back of a pick-up truck.

It also took courage. Each leg of the journey was threatened by a brush with death—fire engines waiting on the runway as their plane made an emergency landing; a 'cowboy' pilot pointing the plane straight down from 4,000 feet to buzz a village; Ruth writhing in pain from altitude sickness; and finally the Bolivian airline strike coupled with the American cocaine raid making their departure more like a death-defying escape.

Sandwiched in between were ten idyllic days in a jungle settlement—a little clearing 70 kilometers, and hundreds of years, away from "modern" civilization.

For the Pughs, this radical change was part of the reason for the trip. Jeff explains: "I realized how sheltered students are—in fact, how sheltered we all are. We just don't know what life is like beyond our boundaries. So part of my objective was to offer students exposure to a different culture.

"I am also interested in theology's effect on society, particularly liberation theology and Third World society," continues theologian Jeff Pugh.

Ruth, who is also well-versed in liberation theology, had joined the Rosa Caufield Circle at the Methodist Church at their former home in Athens, Tennessee. Through that association she discovered that Rosa and Bob Caufield are Methodist missionaries in Bolivia. They have built a small settlement in the tropical forest region of eastern Bolivia at Yucumo. The complex contains a school with dormitory facilities, a tiny open-air church and the Caufields' home.

Ruth became interested in the settlement and found out that groups often visit to help the Caufields with their work. One bit of knowledge led to another. Before long, plans were being made for Ruth and Jeff, some students and Jerry Russell, a former missionary to South America, to travel to the settlement in Yucumo. The Pughs' two daughters, Miriam, 12, and Joy, 8, were simply too young to be included in the group of 13. Church members and friends took care of the girls. "Leaving them was tough," Ruth adds—the first of some tough decisions that the Bolivian experience demanded.

The population of Bolivia is concentrated in the western part of the country, primarily in the Andes Mountains on a plateau called the Altiplano. Centuries of life there have left the land barren and unproductive. In an attempt to improve the lot of its people, the government is encouraging Bolivians to move from the arid Altiplano area to the rich, untouched Amazon jungle regions in the eastern part of the country.

"The people are brought to the area and given land," Jeff explains. "They arrive with a few tools and the clothes on their backs. That's all. They literally hack out an existence in the jungle."

"Moving from the mountain areas to the jungle is almost as radical a change for the Bolivian Indians as it was for us," Ruth points out. "Everything is different for them—the climate, the food, and the type of land. Their clothes are too heavy. They don't know how to grow warm-weather crops. And they don't know how to protect themselves from tropical insects. There's a lot of disease as a result."

So the Caufields' little Yucumo settlement and vocational school exist to help these people adapt to their new surroundings. By providing education for children above the third grade (the level at which government schools end), the settlement holds promise for the future while serving as school, trading post, hospital and religious center for today. It is also an oasis of advanced civilization.

At Yucumo there is the luxury of a well, but no running water. There is electricity; however, it is only generated twice a day to power the radio for contact with the outside world. In the morning it also runs the antique washing machine. The Caufields' abode has a kerosene refrigerator and stove, but cooking for the 90 students, teachers and any passers-by is done over open fire or in stone ovens.

"I would get up about 6:00 a.m. and help with the cooking," Ruth says. "We ate off the land—bananas, meat from jungle animals, whatever—and food preparation took a lot of time and planning." Then she would serve as nurse or housekeeper or join Jeff at the building site to work on the classrooms.

"The buildings are made of handmade brick trucked in from San Borja (a small town 2½ hours away)," says Jeff. "It took six months to get the last shipment."

Five Outstanding Alumni Receive Awards

Five graduates of Elon were recognized for their outstanding contributions to business, their communities and the college at the annual Alumni Association awards luncheon held during Homecoming Weekend on November 8. New Alumni Association President Dr. Walstein Snyder presided. Zachary T. Walker III, immediate past president of the Alumni Association Executive Committee, introduced the alumni, and William G. Long, director of alumni and parent relations, presented each winner with a commemorative plaque.

Other highlights of the luncheon included recognition of the Class of 1936, the newest members of the Golden Alumni Association, and reunion classes of '45, '46, '47, '65 and '66.

Calvin A. Michaels '54 Citizen's Service Award

Action and service have always been a part of the life of Calvin A. Michaels. A Marine veteran of the Pacific Theater, World War II, Michaels distinguished himself at Elon through participation in baseball, football and intramural athletics. He was also an active member of his social fraternity, Sigma Phi Beta.

Michaels currently serves as director of personnel administration for Burlington Industries, a role which also involves him in policy formation for that giant industry.

Community leadership includes membership in the Rotary Club, Kiwanis, Lions and Sertoma clubs. His interest in the field of health delivery and cost containment has led to his service on 11 national, state and regional health-related boards or commissions.

Michaels has been a loyal supporter of Elon, especially in the Alumni Association, serving at one time as its president. He remains an active member of its Executive Committee.

Barbara Day Bass '61 Distinguished Alumna

Barbara Day Bass went directly into education upon graduation from Elon. In 1974 she received the master of education degree from the University of Virginia, three years after she had begun teaching at St. Catherine's School in Richmond, Virginia, where she is currently chairman of the mathematics department.

Bass's exceptional work at St. Catherine's includes the introduction of computers into the school's program. Her vision concerning the computer age brought her national recognition as a winner of a 1984 Presidential Award For Excellence In Teaching Mathematics, presented to her at White House ceremonies.

Bass is active at the college as a member of the Board of Trustees. She has served on the Alumni Association Executive Board also. She and her husband, Walter, also an Elon alumnus, have funded the Bass Scholarship, which annually provides aid to exemplary students with financial need. They have also pledged $100,000 to Elon through the Elon Life for Endowment program.

June Clark Brooks '77 Eddie Ricky Brooks '76 Co-Young Alumni of the Year

June Clark Brooks and Eddie Ricky Brooks were very active during their college days. Eddie played football and June was a cheerleader. They both entered the teaching profession when they were graduated.

On February 1, 1983, their son Joshua was born. It soon became clear that he suffered from biliary atresia, a terminal medical complication. Their efforts to secure a liver transplant gained national attention. Dr. J. Earl Danieley helped lead a campaign to raise the $250,000 required for Josh's medical treatment. Josh received the necessary transplant, but died in his parents' arms on November 26, 1983.

Out of this tragedy, the Brookses began the Joshua Brooks Living Memorial Transplant Association, now a chapter of the National Children's Transplant Association. June is director of patient relations. Ricky serves on the association's board of directors while continuing his teaching and coaching activities.

The Brookses have recently received many awards and citation—the Andre-Nadeau Award for Service to Humanity, Family of the Year in North Carolina, and the Presidential Citation Award presented to those organizations which give support to the private sector.

D. Keith Hall '72 Young Alumnus of the Year

D. Keith Hall's years at Elon were very busy. He was involved in the college's intercollegiate football program while he was also carrying out his responsibilities as husband, father and bread-winner.

Hall worked as a dishwasher at Le Chateau of Burlington. He progressed rapidly to management trainee and store manager in 1972, area manager in 1973, regional manager in 1974, vice president of operations in 1975 and senior vice president in 1977.

During 1977 and '78 when first Green Giant and then Pillsbury purchased the 26 Le Chateau restaurants, Hall stayed on as senior vice president and doubled the number of restaurants.

In 1978 he left Pillsbury and joined friend Thomas D. Mincher to start T. K. Tripps restaurants. T.K. Tripps has added several more locations to its original Greensboro site, and the corporation has branched into a chain called Rock-Ola Cafe. Hall is co-owner and vice president of the multi-million dollar enterprise —at age 35.

He has been an active leader of youth programs in Greensboro and sponsored a football camp for the underprivileged of the area. He also served as an assistant coach for Page High School in Greensboro, the state 4-A champions in 1984.

Alumni

New Chapter Presidents Named

Three alumni have accepted the positions of chapter presidents for their local alumni groups. They will provide principal leadership to their chapters and join the Alumni Executive Committee, the policy-making body of the total alumni program.

James Edgar (Jay) Butler III '78 has taken the helm of the Suffolk/Tidewater Chapter, succeeding Betty Riddick Crigger (B.J.) '76. Jay is associated with the Butler Paper Company. He is an active member of the Suffolk Ruritan Club and the Main Street Methodist Church. He enjoys tennis and fishing. Jay and his wife, Debbie Terry Butler '77, have two children—Jenna, 2½, and Ashley, 1. While at Elon Jay was a member of Kappa Sigma, a leader of Greek Week, and a member of the lacrosse team.

The new president of the Alamance County Chapter, the college's largest, is Wade Williamson Jr. '70. His predecessor was Tom Bass '71. Wade is city executive for Branch Banking and Trust. His activities include membership in the Kiwanis Club (president) and membership on the boards of the Alamance Chamber of Commerce, the Boy Scouts of America, and the Salvation Army. He and his wife, Jane, have two children—Kristen, 14, and Karrie, 10. While at Elon Wade played varsity football and was a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon.

Succeeding Ashburn Kirby '57 as head of the Guilford County Chapter, the second largest alumni group, is William Carl (B.Z.) Zint '79. He is associated with AT&T Technologies of Greensboro. B.Z. and his wife, Patricia, are the parents of two children—Katie, 4½, and Chip, 1½. They are members of the Piney Grove Methodist Church of Kernersville. Fishing and all types of water sports fill B.Z.'s spare time. While at Elon B.Z. was a co-founder of WSOE-FM, the college's radio station, and a member of Kappa Sigma.

Sigma Pi Alumni Win National Award

Elon's alumni chapter of Sigma Pi, the Walter H. Lemmond, Jr. Alumni Club, was named the "Outstanding Alumni Club" at the 1986 Sigma Pi convocation in Washington, D.C. The club was selected out of over 40 active clubs in the United States and Canada.

To commemorate the occasion, a plaque was presented to the club.

Current alumni officers are Tim Moore '78, president; James Kouchinsky '83, secretary; and Ken Gould '80, treasurer.

Elon's alumni chapter was founded in 1979 and currently tallies its membership at 76—a remarkable 61 percent of all Sigma Pi alumni.

Over the past eight years the club has given more than $2000 in scholarships to brothers at Elon. The members also publish a magazine, A Slice of the Pi, three times a year.

"A PORTRAIT OF HOPE"

A promotional spot for a Washington TV series wins Lana Peavy '76 an Emmy.

By Yvonne Evans '87

How does a woman react to the news she has breast cancer? Lanna Peavy '76 attempted to answer this question in a promotional spot for a television series entitled "Breast Cancer: A Portrait of Hope." The result was a commercial that won her the Washington Emmy Award from the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences.

"The assignment wasn't difficult," said Peavy. "I could do anything I wanted. They were all my ideas, ideas of a woman's struggle with breast cancer."

Peavy is the senior promotion producer for WUSA, Washington's highest rated television station. The promotional spot for the breast cancer series was her first assignment when she began working at the station in 1983.

The series, which was to be aired on the nightly news, was about Ellen Kingsley, a WUSA reporter. After discovering she had breast cancer, Kingsley decided to tell the story of her own personal struggle from beginning to end. She began to film her battle with cancer—the chemotherapy treatment which resulted in her losing her hair; the days spent in a hospital bed. This footage revealed perhaps the most important part of her struggle—the constant support she received from her family and friends. The footage was then edited and shaped to become the series on breast cancer.

In producing the commercial, Peavy decided not to use any of the actual footage from the series. Instead she shot her own black-and-white portraits of Kingsley's family and friends, mixed them with piano music by George Winston and wrote a moving script to produce a soft-sell effect for the series.

"I tried to get a feel for the spot and what it was all about. I decided it had to be very personal so it wouldn't scare viewers away. I wanted to present a portrait of hope for women with breast cancer," Peavy said.

"Winning the award was such a personal victory for Ellen and me," said Peavy. "Now we are best friends."

Peavy's commercial was chosen from more than 90 entries for the Washington Emmy. In fact, two of the final five in the selection process were her spots—quite an accomplishment for her first assignment.

Television work was not always in Peavy's career plans. "I wanted to write for a newspaper, but when I graduated from Elon, I couldn't find a job," she said. So she worked as a waitress at night and taught tennis under Kay Yow, an Elon graduate who was recently named coach of the U.S. women's Olympic basketball team for the '88 games. She then worked selling ads for the City/County Newspaper in Burlington.

"I didn't think television work was accessible to me at the time," said Peavy. She asked a friend of hers in Wilmington, N.C., to help her get a job at the Wilmington Star. Instead he got her an interview at WECT Channel 6 in Wilmington as a cameraperson.

"I had no previous experience with television," Peavy said. That did not seem to matter. "In a low market situation like Wilmington, you really don't need experience," she said. "You learn how to do everything and really gain more that way."

Peavy learned to operate a camera in two hours and was assigned to film the 6 and 11 o'clock news. She ran a camera for about three months and was then promoted to on-air switcher. "I was actually switching commercials on live TV," she said. She was quickly promoted to director of morning broadcast and later to promotion manager.

Peavy gained valuable experience in her three years in Wilmington. She then moved to Charleston, S.C., where she worked as a promotion manager. Through her job she made many important contacts, including Bruce Bryant, who would become most influential in her career.

Lana Peavy

Bryant was the promotion manager for KPRC in Houston. Peavy, originally from Houston, met Bryant at a convention and never dreamed she would one day work for him at a station in the 10th market, one with a very large viewing audience. "He called me and asked me if I was ready to come home. I quickly resigned and went to work for Bryant," she said. There Peavy learned many new skills and worked with the most advanced equipment in the field. "I could not believe I was working at a place like this and getting paid for it," she said.

While at KPRC, Peavy began to get job offers. "I was on stage in Houston and I started getting noticed," she said. After turning down an NBC affiliate in Washington, she received an offer from WUSA and flew to Washington to look the job over. "It was a great opportunity for me because Washington is the news mecca of the East Coast," she said.

Peavy has produced many other commercials while at WUSA. "I think I have promoted everything I could possibly promote," she said. Some of her other work includes commercials for series on chemical crime, neurotoxins, polygraph tests and a weekly series called "On the Road."

"They tell it, I sell it," said Peavy, describing her duties at the station.

Peavy attributes her success to starting at the right level, preferably a lower level which gave her the opportunity to learn how to do everything. Peavy feels that showing aggression and being relaxed and confident in interviews are also essential to success.

"The most important thing is to have ideas. If you have the ideas, you can be successful at anything."

Brenda Holt McGee '75

A Teacher Who Beat the Predictions

By Susan Klopman

No one understands the influence of an elementary school teacher better than Brenda Holt McGee '75. That's why she decided to be one, and by all accounts, she's very, very good.

This spring McGee was awarded one of nine Perot Excellence in Teaching Awards for her outstanding work as a fifth grade teacher at Thomas Elementary School in Plano, Texas. She also received the Conservation Teacher of the Year award in her county and region.

The Perot Awards, named after patron H. Ross Perot, are the most prestigious teaching awards in Texas, and competition is intense. With 950 students, McGee's school is the largest elementary school in Plano, a city which has one of the largest public school systems in Texas. McGee was selected "Teacher of the Year" by her peers. Local winners compete statewide until nominations are narrowed to the final nine. Winners receive a $650 cash award.

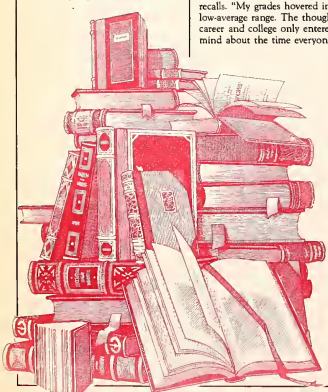
"I was realy honored just to be chosen by my school," McGee said, never dreaming that she would be one of the Perot Award winners. Criteria for the award evaluate a teacher's "extra efforts": encouraging high quality work and risk-taking to learn; going beyond expected teaching requirements so that students positively adjust their life goals; and providing educational leadership for parents, fellow staff members and the community.

McGee describes the evaluation process: "The selection team observed my classroom, read folders I had compiled about our work and conducted a personal interview with me." The interview examined her teaching philosophy, especially probing how she would handle certain situations. It was perhaps in that interview that the award was won, for McGee's philosophy of teaching has its roots in her own unfortunate elementary school experience.

Not long after little Brenda Holt began school, her teachers told her parents that she appeared to be "slow." They even projected that she might never graduate from high school. Tragically, everyone fell under the spell of that prediction. Teachers expected very little of Brenda. She expected even less of herself.

"I remember hating school," she says, "and school hated me! I will never forget the humiliation of being called out of class to go to remedial reading sessions and being placed in a reading and math group called the 'chickadees.'"

"My high school years were definitely an improvement," she recalls. "My grades hovered in the low-average range. The thought of a career and college only entered my mind about the time everyone else was buying footlockers for their dorm.



"I managed to get into a small junior college in North Carolina where my parents knew the college president on a personal basis," she continues. "They decided secretarial science would be best for me. I, on the other hand, decided to major in extracurricular activities. Needless to say, I had a wonderful year socially, but I did not impress the academic dean."

The working world was next, and by the time McGee was 21, she had met and married her husband, Gerald. He was a student at Guilford College.

"During his last semester," she says, "his Marine Reserve unit was called to active duty. That meant his graduation would be put off indefinitely unless we could get his professors to agree to let me sit in class for him, take notes and forward his assignments. Guilford agreed and that was the turning point in my life."

One week after her husband graduated, McGee launched her own college career at Elon. "Ken Harper (now director of graduate admissions) admitted me on probation. That was the beginning of a whole new life for me," McGee recalls with real emotion in her voice.

She goes on to talk about faculty members who believed in her and encouraged her. "All my professors cared," she says. "They were fantastic." Without a moment's hesitation she can recall professor after professor and tell you what was special about the person and the class.

"Jo Williams (now vice president for development) really encouraged me," she says. "I wrote a children's book for her education class and handed it in with great uncertainty. Dr. Williams applauded my creativity. Her support was just what I needed."

McGee was on the dean's list each semester at Elon. She received a B.A. degree with honors in three years and passed the teacher's certification with flying colors.

She taught third grade for six years in Burlington and completed the M.Ed. degree at UNCG. Then her husband was transferred. They moved to a little community in the mountains of North Carolina, and she discovered that the town had not hired a new teacher in over five years. She was not able to change that statistic. The local newspaper editor, however, found out that she had published some articles in teaching magazines, so he hired her as a feature writer.

Six months later her husband was transferred again—this time to Texas.

McGee quickly found a job at the Plano Daily-Star Courier as a business writer and photographer (a skill she had added along the way). One day while giving a tour to a troop of Boy Scouts, she realized what was missing in her work—children. So it was back to the schoolhouse for Brenda McGee.

What's it like today in her classroom at Thomas Elementary School? "I work with the kids who are 'not supposed to do well,'" she explains. "I always look for the child who slumps in a chair and never says anything. Learning should be a pleasant and successful experience. Each child should have the right to exceed his expected potential and feel comfortable in a non-threatening environment."

"Elon formulated the way I teach," she adds. "They taught me to care, first, and to teach, second. Elon is not a paper mill. Their first concern is people."

McGee's award as the Conservation Teacher of the Year reinforces the fact that she adds quality to her caring approach. This competition begins locally and finally results in a national award. At each stage the focus is on how a teacher presents environmental conservation to the students.

McGee and her class, like all fifth graders in Plano, spend one week at an environmental camp in Oklahoma. She entered her class's work at the camp as a special project.

"Throughout the year we focus

Winter Sports—Sneak Preview

Men's Basketball

The 1986-87 basketball squad is under the direction of new head coach Bob Burton. Coach Burton came to Elon after serving on the staff of Don DeVoe's Tennessee Volunteers.

"Control" is the key word for Elon to have a successful season. Coach Burton feels that a more disciplined style of play will help the Fightin' Christians to become more consistent and confident on the road to a winning season.

Experience is no problem for this year's squad. Ten of 11 players return from a team that finished fifth in the conference and the district. The only player lost was a big one, Warren Wallace, All District, All Conference and most of all, 16.3 points per game. Coach Burton hopes that with a little more control, the team should be able to balance the scoring and not just be a one-man show.

Back from last year's squad are second leading scorer Bernard Torain, avg. 10.9, and third leading scorer Eric Blair, avg. 10.4. Coach Burton feels that the big change will be the inside game. Eric Hairston returns at the center spot where he performed well for the Fightin' Christians last year. Burton hopes to use his big man inside for at least 16 points per game as compared with Hairston's 9.8 of last year. The backcourt is solid with the return of Russ Capps and Howard Coe.

Burton lists the strengths of his team as experience, good athletic ability, quickness and excellent players in the 6'3" to 6'5" range. Lack of height and the absence of dominant players seem to be the only weaknesses of the 1986-87 Fightin' Christians. Look for an improvement on last year's 16 and 14 record. Burton feels that control and discipline will swing the close games Elon's way, which should add five wins to the schedule.

Women's Basketball

For Jackie Myers and the Lady Fightin' Christians, the '85'86 season may well have been an example of what coaches these days call a "rebuilding year." Overall the lady hoopsters finished at 5 and 22, 3 and 13 in the conference. Most people would say, "5 and 22, exactly how much rebuilding are you planning to do?" But for people who know Jackie Myers and the ladies who make up this very young squad, 1986-87 is shaping up to be a productive year.

Coach Myers feels that this team has promise. It should be much improved over last year's team. Experience returns in the form of three previous starters. Sophomore-guard Mae Haith (14.2 ppg) is back from last year's squad, along with running mate Lisa Briggs (22.1 ppg) and junior center/forward Lisa Hairston (9.7 ppg). Joining this year's squad will be two East/West All-Star performers, Ann Walters 6'2" from Monroe High School and Paula Keaney, 5'10", out of Southwest Guilford High School. Look for the development of a strong number of young players and add timely senior leadership—a combination that should make the Lady Fightin' Christians competitive in both the conference and the district.

Dockrill '86 Named All-American

Former Elon golfer Chris Dockrill '86 has been voted NAIA All-American and NAIA Academic All-American for his athletic and academic achievements. To be named to the Academic Team, one must place within the top 15 golfers in the country and have a grade point average of 3.25 or better. Last season, Dockrill placed fifth nationally overall. He is now employed at an accounting firm in Greensboro.

Taylor could also hit and had a .292 average in 1949. He led Elon to three straight North State Conference titles. Taylor dropped out of school his senior year after attaining a contract with the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Don McLaughlin

One of the all-time defensive specialists at Elon, McLaughlin played football for four years at Elon (1972-75) and was on the NAIA national runner-up team in 1973 with Joe West.

He reaped All-Conference, All-State and All-District honors and was named honorable mention All-America by the Associated Press in 1975, his senior year.

He holds the season record of 593 kickoff return yards at Elon. Career-wise, he still holds defensive records of most kickoff returns (50), most yards on kickoff returns (1193), most combined punts/kickoff returns (105) and most yardage on same (1,721).

Joe West

West, from Greenville, N.C., is still on the sports scene as a National League umpire, but at Elon he was one of the finest quarterbacks ever to wear the Maroon and Gold.

West played at Elon in 1971, 1972 and 1973 after transferring from East Carolina after the Pirates moved him to a safety position. All of his Elon years were played under coach Red Wilson.

West was an excellent passer and a smart quarterback who led the Fightin' Christians to its first No. 1 ranking during the 1973 season.

During his career, West completed 342 of 638 passes for 4,337 yards and 35 touchdowns. He threw 18 TD passes in 1973, second best in Elon history.

Kay Yow

A native of Gibsonville, Yow has become a legend in her own time by coaching U.S. women's basketball teams to successive victories over the Russian women.

Her greatest honor came even more recently. She has been named head coach of the U.S. Women's team for the 1988 Olympics at Seoul, Korea.

Her first season at Elon, 1971-72, saw the Lady Christians win only five games while losing 11. But in 1972-73, they won 13 games and lost three. And in 1973-74, Elon won 20 games while losing only one to win the conference and Region 2 playoff championships.

In her final year, 1974-75, Yow's Elon squad won 19, lost four as the Lady Christians again won the conference crown.

PARENTS WEEKEND

Parents Weekend

Beginning with the Elon College Faculty/Student Showcase on Friday, September 26th and ending with a concert by the Emanons of Elon on Sunday, hundreds of parents and their sons and daughters enjoyed Parents Weekend. Meetings with faculty advisers, a picnic lunch, a winning football game (Carson-Newman), a dance at the Alamance Country Club, and a special worship service constituted the other principal events.

During the Weekend the first meeting of the Elon College Parents' Council took place. An advisory body consisting of parents representing students in each of the college's classes, the council held its first official sesson on Friday. At Holland House the following day, President and Mrs. Young hosted the new group at a buffet luncheon.

Homecoming

Homecoming is traditionally a time for renewing old friendships and enjoying being part of campus life again. This year was no exception. Beginning with the 13th annual golf tournament, held in a torrential downpour, the Elon spirit proved to be strong! Several classes—1936; 1945, 46 and 47; and 1965-66—held special reunions which were unqualified successes.

Elon College Life Income Plans

Elon College has been able to extend its outreach and to improve its programs and facilities largely because of people who cared about the institution and contributed to its support. This support has enabled Elon to keep its tuition among the lowest of the private institutions and to build up a modest endowment.

Even with increased support from a larger number of alumni and other friends, it has been difficult in recent years to stay abreast of the dramatically increasing costs of providing quality education for young people. It has been necessary to raise tuition from time to time in order to ensure financial stability and to pay the costs of operation. Special campaigns have helped by providing funds for capital improvements and increased endowment.

One of the ways in which Elon has moved to strengthen its financial support has been to develop carefully structured programs of deferred giving, whereby benefactors can get the satisfaction of arranging in the present for gifts which come to the college in the future. Such gifts can be planned to benefit donors as well as the college. Donors benefit by taking maximum advantage of available tax deductions, by planning the gifts in a way to fit in with their long-term financial circumstances and income needs, and by making the gifts an integral part of their estate plans. Deferred gifts can be made to Elon in a number of ways, among which are life income plans, gifts by will, life insurance, gifts of property with life estate retained, and the charitable lead trust.

The Need for Life Income Plans

Some Elon supporters want to express their regard for the college in a larger, tangible way but are faced, at the same time, with the need to protect their own financial future, often including providing for a spouse or other family members. Giving a major gift outright may not seem like a prudent act in the face of concerns about long-term personal and family needs. On the other hand, a life income plan may make a major gift possible and help assure personal and family security at the same time.

How Life Income Plans Work

Each life income plan has its own particular advantages, but all come from the same basic concept: money, securities, land or other property is given to Elon College and, in return, the donor receives an income for life. If the donor desires, a spouse or other person can be designated as a beneficiary, either instead of the donor or as a survivor beneficiary after the death of the donor. All plans provide tax advantages to the donor. All relieve the donor, or any beneficiary designated by the donor, of investment worries or management problems connected with the assets which are given to Elon. In all of these plans, Elon College will ultimately receive the remaining principal of the gift, to be used for its general purposes or for a special purpose which has been mutually accepted and written into the life income agreement.

Benefits of Life Income Plans

Tax Benefits

Income Tax Deduction. In all of the life income plans, there is an immediate income tax deduction for the charitable portion of the gift. The charitable portion is the total value of the gift at the time it is made, minus the value of the life income interest which the donor retains. The income tax deduction is determined from official tax tables which take into account the amount of the gift, the ages and number of beneficiaries, and the rate of return.

Possible Capital Gains Tax Benefit. In many cases, a life income plan can be funded with appreciated securities or other appreciated assets, thus providing the donor with an income tax deduction based on the full current value, without capital gains tax liability on the appreciation.

Estate Tax Benefits. A donor who makes a life income gift to Elon College can obtain the same estate tax benefits as for a charitable gift by will.

Reduced Tax on Income. In some cases, life income payments may be taxed at capital gains rates or even as a tax-free return of principal.

Other Economic Benefits

A life income gift to Elon can assure an income for life to the donor, to another prime beneficiary, or to a survivor beneficiary. In some cases, this may be the best way to provide a supplemental or main income during regular retirement or for a disabled person.

Increased Yield. The life income gift can be funded with low-yield stocks, real estate, or other property as a means of improving the return on these assets. If the assets are also appreciated as well as low-yield, a life income plan provides an opportunity to maximize yield while escaping a capital gains penalty.

Investment Benefits. A life income plan permits diversification of investment holdings while freeing the donor or other designated beneficiary from investment worries and responsibilities. This could well be a major consideration in any case where a spouse or other designated beneficiary is inexperienced or uninterested in looking after investments.

Personal Satisfaction

Perhaps the greatest benefit of a life income gift to Elon is the joy the donor feels in making a substantial contribution to the work of the college during his or her lifetime. The donor has the pleasure of this new relationship with the college, during which both the donor and the institution are keenly aware of the good the gift will do in helping to provide educational opportunities for young people. The fact that both donor and institution benefit from the gift adds to the overall satisfaction.

Description of Life Income Plans

Life Income Annuity

The charitable gift annuity is probably the easiest to understand, and the simplest to set up and administer, of any of the deferred gift programs. In return for a gift, Elon College will give a legal agreement which guarantees lifetime payments to the donor or other designated beneficiary. The program is similar to insurance, in that the payments are based on life expectancy.

For tax purposes, the gift to Elon is treated as part gift and part investment. The gift part is deductible on the donor's income tax return in the year the gift is made. The amount of the deduction depends on the donor's age and the rate of return to the donor. A substantial part of the income from the gift annuity is tax free, since a portion of each annuity payment is treated as a return of capital.

When appreciated assets are exchanged for a charitable gift annuity, the gain is determined under the bargain sales provisions. Under these rules, only part of the gain is taxable. A further benefit is that usually the taxable portion can be deferred and reported ratably over the term of the annuity.

Deferred Payment Life Income Annuity

If an Elon College donor enjoys a comfortable income now but would like to ensure an adequate income during retirement, a deferred payment life income annuity may be a good answer. Or a donor can contribute to the financial security of another person, whose income needs may be greater at a later time, by establishing a deferred payment life income annuity and naming the other person as beneficiary. Income payments can start at the time of retirement or on a specified date in the future.

The donor has the satisfaction of making a significant gift to Elon College now, resulting in an immediate income tax deduction when the tax bracket may be higher. Likewise, deferred income payments may be taxed at lower rates because income is generally lower during retirement years. Since a large part of each guaranteed annuity payment is also tax-free, the beneficiary of a deferred payment gift annuity will receive income when it is most needed and at a time when it is likely to be taxed the least.

If an Elon College supporter is interested in a deferred payment gift annuity but does not wish to make a major gift now, he or she should consider establishing a small deferred payment gift annuity now and adding to it each year until it has reached the level necessary to provide the desired income upon retirement or by a specified date.

Life Income Trusts

Federal tax law authorizes life income trusts which are commonly called charitable remainder trusts. These trusts are divided for tax purposes into the income interest and the remainder interest. The remainder interest is that portion of trust assets which remains after the income interest has been satisfied. This is the portion for which an income tax deduction is allowed.

A trust provides an excellent means of transferring gifts to Elon College in return for a life income. The trust allows considerable flexibility in setting up the agreement and in managing the assets. Elon College usually serves as trustee, but the donor may choose to name a financial insitution or other competent agency or person as trustee. The donor may, in lieu of setting up the trust for life, elect to have the trust terminate after a designated period of time, not to exceed twenty years.

A life income trust is a very useful way to convert low-income or non-income assets into a form which will yield current income to the donor or designated beneficiary. In fact, any supporter who would like to give a major gift to Elon but needs an income from the gift should consider a life income trust. This is particularly so when the trust will be funded by the transfer of low-cost, highly appreciated assets which, if sold, would result in a large capital gains tax liability. If a life income trust is established, the capital gains tax will not be incurred.

Elon College Pooled Income Fund. The Elon College Pooled Income Fund is a specific kind of life income trust which was established in 1975, in accordance with standards prescribed by the Internal Revenue Service. All gifts to the fund are "pooled" and invested by the trustee to produce a life income for the donors or other designated beneficiaries. Thus the fund operates in much the same way as a mutual fund. Donors share in the fund in proportion to how much they have contributed to it.

Net earnings of the fund are distributed quarterly to the beneficiaries on a pro rata basis. Donors can make additional gifts to the fund any time they want to increase their shares and their income payments. The fund cannot accept or invest in tax-exempt securities. When an income interest is terminated by the death of the last beneficiary, that portion of the assets is removed from the fund and distributed to Elon College for its general use or for a mutually agreed upon purpose.

A federal income tax deduction is allowed for a gift to the pooled income fund in the year the gift is made, with a five-year carry-over of any unused portion of the deduction. The deduction is determined from official tax tables which take into account the value of the retained life interest, based on the donor's age and the rate-of-return history of the fund. If a gift of appreciated assets is made to the fund, the donor receives credit for full current value without capital gains tax liability.

Charitable Remainder Annuity Trust. This trust allows the donor to retain a life income interest as a guaranteed annuity, a fixed dollar amount which must equal at least five percent of the initial fair market value of the trust assets. This may appeal to a donor who prefers a guaranteed fixed sum rather than a variable rate of return. The fixed sum must be paid at least annually to the donor or to one or more designated beneficiaries, either for life or a term not to exceed 20 years. Income payments may be made quarterly, semi-annually, or annually.

An income tax deduction is available to the donor in the year that the trust is established, based on the present value of the portion which will eventually come to Elon College. If the donor cannot use the entire amount of the deduction in the year when it is allowed, the excess can be used up during the five succeeding years. There is no capital gains tax on long-term, appreciated property, either when donated to the trust or when sold by the trustee for reinvestment purposes.

Charitable Remainder Unitrust. Any donor who wants to make a sizable gift to Elon and receive a life income in return should consider the unitrust. The unitrust has its own portfolio, and the income payment to the donor or other beneficiary is a fixed percentage of the market value of the portfolio, as determined by annual revaluations. The rate of return (percentage of market value) does not change, but the dollar amount of income payments will vary as the value of the trust assets changes from year to year. Thus, the unitrust can be a hedge against inflation. Income payments may be made quarterly, semi-annually, or annually.

An income tax deducoon is allowed for the present value of the charitable remainder in the year that the trust is established. There is a five-year carry-over for any part of the deduction which cannot be used in the first year. The unitrust is especially attractive to the donor who wants to fund the trust with highly appreciated assets, since neither the donor nor the trust is subject to a capital gains tax.

Part of the income received by the donor or other beneficiary may receive favorable tax treatment, depending on how it was earned by the trust. The normal investment strategy for a unitrust is growth-oriented, which may make this the most appropriate plan for a donor who is in a high tax bracket and would prefer increased future income payments, as the portfolio grows. Also, in contrast to the annuity trust, additional contributions may be made to the unitrust at the discretion of the donor.

Net Income Unitrust. There are two variations of the charitable remainder unitrust. The net income unitrust provides for payment to the donor or other beneficiary the net income earned by the trust up to the percentage of the value of the trust assets specified in the trust agreement. The net income plus make-up unitrust is the same as the net income unitrust, except that any shortage in the annual payment or payments (failure to reach the percentage specified in the trust agreement) is made up in future years when the earned income is in excess of the specified percentage.

The net income plus make-up unitrust is recommended as a method of providing for retirement. The trust can invest initially in growth assets and later change over to high yield investments. The net income unitrust or the net income plus make-up unitrust is also the best life income agreement to use when the funding gift consists of non-income-producing real estate or low-yield securities which cannot be readily sold or reinvested. This approach gives the trustee the necessary time to convert non-income-producing or low-yield property into income-producing assets.

Gift of Home or Farm, Retaining Lifetime Use and Enjoyment of Property

This remarkable gift technique is not strictly one of the lifetime income plans but is related to these plans because it allows a donor to give a home (including a "second" or vacation home, condominium, or apartment) or a farm to Elon College, while retaining a lifetime right to the full use and enjoyment of the property. The donor is entitled to an income tax deduction equal to the present value of Elon College's future interest in the property. The donor experiences the satisfaction of giving Elon the property and getting an income tax deduction now, even though donor use and enjoyment of the property continue the same as before. The donor can also retain a life estate in the property for a spouse or other survivor.

This method of giving has some advantages over giving the same property by will. Along with the income tax deduction, it provides the same estate tax benefits, plus a saving in probate costs.

Which Plan Is Best for You

Any major gift to Elon should be planned and timed to suit your personal interests and to fit into your overall estate plans. For instance, unproductive assets could be placed now in a charitable remainder trust, generating tax savings and dependable new income. Part of the tax savings and new income could be used to pay the premiums on additional life insurance, thus not only assuring cash liquidity in your estate but partially or wholly replacing the value of the assets which you donated to Elon through the trust.

Check with your attorney or tax adviser to see how a major gift to Elon College can fit in with your estate plans. Also feel free to call or write us for further information or answers to your questions. We will be pleased to work with you and your advisers in exploring the best way for you to make your gift to Elon.

MoE MUG SHOT

In every issue of The Magazine of Elon we invite our readers to keep us posted on their activities. To let you know how much we appreciate hearing from you, each issue will now feature a class note selected at random by the magazine staff. The noteworthy sender will receive a customized "ELON" coffee mug and our warmest thanks for keeping in touch. So come on . . . get mugged!

We're glad we heard from:

Kathy Harper '72 has been elected to the Steering Committee for the International Phoenix Users Group. Her responsibilities include working with the sponsoring consultants to obtain the documentation and communication needs requested by the user group and serving on a task force to award excellence in computer-based training.

ELON

OOPS!

In the October Honor Roll of Donors, Kathleen McDonald Snead '57 was erroneously listed as deceased. Ms. Snead is very much alive—and well—in Colts Neck, New Jersey. We sincerely apologize to her for this error.

'44

Mark W. Andes was installed as pastor of Boger United Church of Christ, Concord, NC.

Betty Lynch Bowman has been named Principal of the Year for Burlington City Schools. Dr. Bowman has been involved in education for 41 years—the last 18 with the city system.

Former football coach Bill Paolantonio was featured recently in an article in The Philadelphia Inquirer. The subject was football—football as it used to be, when everything was simpler.

Paolantonio coached Conestoga High School teams in the mid-1950s when they dominated the Ches-Mont League. In the article he reminisces about the teams, the plays, even the students, noting that everything is different now, especially the language, the strategy, even the typical player/student. Although there are loss of changes, Paolantonio stays involved in the world he loves as an assistant in Conestoga's athletic department.

Gresham Erlacher retired from the United States Federal Court System on July 31, after serving 23 years as Official Court Reporter. He began working with The Honorable Eugene A. Gordon when he was appointed to the bench in 1964. Graham, and his wife, Mildred Johnson Erlacher '49 will continue to operate their private court-reporting business, Graham Erlacher & Associates in Winston-Salem, NC. Graham is also a real estate broker.

Dwight L. Dillon was elected president of the Independent Insurance Agents of America (IIAA) during the Association's 90th Annual Convention held recently in Toronto. Mr. Dillon, of Dillon Insurance Agency, Bassett, Va., will serve as president of the IIAA for one year. IIAA is the nation's largest independent producers association, representing 220,000 independent agents and their employees.

Whatever Happened To?

H. Reid '46

A major in English has worked very well for H. Reid—writer, journalist and teacher. He retired in 1982 after a 42-year career in the newspaper business, and now he occasionally writes for magazines. He also taught journalism in high school for a while, but his favorite vocation has always been writing, and his favorite subject is steam railroading.

Reid is the author of five books about the railroad. His most recent publication, which is in its second edition, is Extra South—An Unscheduled, Unhurried Look at Dixie Steam Railroading. The book contains a foreword by former Elon professor and friend Manly Wade Wellman. Many of the photographs in the book were taken by Reid.

His other interests include cartooning, for which he was well known at Elon, and stamp and record-collecting. His extensive recordings of the big bands, which date back to 1918, have been willed to Elon's McEwen Library.

Reid is married to the former Virginia Ettell, a 1947 graduate of the college. She runs a medical lab in Virginia Beach, Va.

The Reids are at home at 8549 Wayland Street, Norfolk, VA 23503.

Robert F. McLean '60

Former football player and history major Robert F. McLean graduated from Elon and went straight back into the classroom as a history teacher and back out on the field as football coach in Florence, SC. Four years later he switched to a career in insurance—obviously a very good move. For the next 11 years he was associated with the Horace Mann Insurance Company. Now as an agency owner and representative for Nationwide, he has a 1983 Service Award to his credit.

McLean's interest in sports has found an outlet in many civic organizations. He was on the original board for the Florence Junior Football League. He currently serves on the city recreation board and enjoys being a member of the Pee Dee area Big Brothers association. As president of the Kiwanis Club, he traveled to Austria to attend their international convention.

McLean and his wife, Emily, have four children: Mark, a graduate of the University of South Carolina; Heather, a junior at Columbia College and the 1984 "Miss Citadel"; Laura, 17; and Courtney, 13.

The McLeans live at 823 Mohawk Drive, Florence, SC 29501.

Harriet Hammond Dalcin '62

Harriet Dalcin received her bachelor of arts degree in elementary education at Elon. She taught school for three years after graduation. Later she worked for two years as an interior decorator in Lexington, Kentucky. After an absence from the classroom, she is considering doing graduate studies at the University of Kentucky and returning to teaching.

Dalcin serves as a volunteer for the Chandler Medical Center at the university and for many political and booster clubs in Lexington.

She is married to John Dalcin Jr., a '63 graduate and former football player at Elon. He is the manager of Reich Drill Industries. The Dalcins, including their two children, Becky and Matt, love sports and keep up with the Fightin' Christians. Dalcin says she is looking forward to returning to Elon next year for her 25th class reunion.

Her address is 724 Malibu Dr., Lexington, Kentucky 40502.

In a recent letter to Dr. Earl Danielsy, Bill Dalke writes: "At age 42 and unavoidably middle-aged, it strikes me as incredible that I am looking back over fifteen years as a parish minister in the UCC and am now in the midst of exciting changes with a wide-open future. After six years in my previous parish in Portland, Maine (Woodfords Congregational Church, UCC.), I have been director of the State of Maine's Weatherization Program for the past year. This ten-million dollar program makes the homes of low-income persons more energy efficient. I became involved in low-income housing problems through Habitat for Humanity, helping to establish the first affiliate in Maine.

Now I am beginning a new position—Interim Associate Conference Minister for the Maine Conference, UCC—which gives me a wonderful opportunity to explore Conference work in an area my family and I enjoy living in, while working with staff and churches I enjoy. After six years of city life, Sylvia and I are happy living in a rural part of Maine with our two daughters, Keith and Kara, now a sophomore and a freshman at Wiscasset High School.

I continue to look back with fondness and appreciation to the second chance Elon gave me after a false college start in the Engineering School of UVA. Elon prepared me well for the M.Div. Program at Vanderbilt and the post graduate S.T.M. Program at Union Theological Seminary, New York City, where I was awarded a Masland Fellowship. I hope Elon continues the compassionate, yet quality academic air which you instilled as president. Elon was there for me at a critical time."

Roger B. Wilson '52

Do You Remember When?

No, this is not a photo of the daring young man on the flying trapeze! It's alumnus Roger B. Wilson '52 walking some rather precarious scaffolding during the renovation of Whitley Auditorium in June 1952.

Wilson sent this and other photos from his Elon days to the college recently for use in upcoming Centennial publications. Our thanks to Mr. Wilson for this rare and unpublished photo. It is just too good to keep secret until 1989.

Included was Wilson's fascinating description of how the scaffolding was constructed. He writes:

"The side supports were erected first. The tops were made glassy smooth with either soap or candle wax. Two long ladders were lashed together (under the projection booth) with center pieces and cables affixed. Cloth-covered planking was placed over the rungs to make walking easier (the cloth prevented slips). The two ladders were then easy to slide the length of the hall.

"The light blue overhead dome was painted by means of a stepladder on the covered planks. It was tall enough to reach another crosspiece which rested on the inside of the dome.

"A large tarpaulin was tied to the railing to catch any paint droppings."

"The boss asked me to get to the middle. I crawled there, stood up and started walking."

Wilson forgot to mention how hard his heart was pounding.

With the Elon Centennial celebration only two years away, the Office of Publications is looking for photographs to use in publications and displays. If you have interesting original photographs or snapshots from Elon's history—early or recent—that you are willing to lend or donate to the college archives, please contact Nan Perkins, Director of Publications and Public Information, Campus Box 2116, Elon College, NC 27244-2010, Telephone 919-584-2231.

Three Graduates Receive Top Marks as Educators

By Yvonne Evans '87

Elon College has a reputation for producing top quality graduates in all fields of study. The education program is no exception, yielding a rich history of successful graduates—educators like Dr. Betty Bowman '44, Wilma Parrish '57 and Shirley Faircloth '69, who have recently been named Principal or Teacher of the Year for their respective school systems.

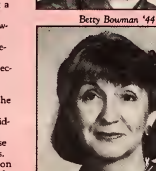
Dr. Betty Bowman has been named Principal of the Year for the Burlington City Schools. This 11-year principal of Broadview Middle School has been involved in education for 41 years, 18 of those with the Burlington City Schools. She earned the master of education degree at UNC-Greensboro and the doctoral degree at UNC-Chapel Hill.

Bowman is involved in many civic and community organizations. She is a veteran of the Parent-Teacher Association from which she received the 1985 District VI Outstanding Educator of the Year Award. She is chairman of the state PTA education commission.

A 1957 graduate of Elon College, Wilma Parrish, principal of Western Middle School, has been named 1986 Principal of the Year for Alamance County Schools.

Parrish is also a graduate of UNCG and UNC-Chapel Hill. Three years after she came to Western Middle, the school was selected by a leading education author as one of the four leading middle schools in the nation.

Betty Bowman '44



Shirley Faircloth '69

Shirley C. Faircloth, an English instructor at Walter Williams High School, has been named Teacher of the Year by the Burlington City School Board. Faircloth earned her bachelor of art degree from Elon College and did post-graduate work at UNC-Chapel Hill.

Faircloth, who has taught at Williams for 17 years, has served as chairman of the English department, a member of the scholarship committee, as a performance appraisal training leader and as a mentor teacher. She has done much to help students prepare for college by setting up the high school's first Advanced Placement course.

Nancy April Marchman '83
A Career That Is Taking Off

When Nancy April Marchman spent the Winter Term in England in 1983, she never dreamed she would make the connection that would lead to her future career—nor could she have predicted the interesting twist her career has taken.

It all began when she took a side excursion to Paris to see the sights. "On the plane I met two Delta Airlines flight attendants who started telling me about their work," she recalls. "It sounded interesting and they promised to send me an application, but I really didn't think too much more about it."

Majoring in business administration offered Marchman several career opportunities, so she wasn't absolutely sure she wanted to work in the airline industry.

True to their words, however, the attendants sent her an application. "I remember thinking that since they had taken the trouble to send it, I should fill it out," she says.

Things began to fall in place, and in the fall of '83, Marchman began working for Delta. "I'm on reserve status at our base in Atlanta," she says, explaining that she is on standby 24 hours a day, everyday, except for designated days off.

Early in her career her supervisor asked if she were interested in working for the publications department. "I wasn't sure exactly what that meant," she says, "but it sounded interesting, so I said yes."

It was one full year before she heard anymore about it. Then she received the exciting news that she had been selected as the featured employee in Delta's latest advertising campaign.

"I believe Delta is the only airline using their own employees in their advertising," Marchman points out. Everything was done very professionally, just as it is with top models. She spent about nine hours with a make-up artist, a hairdresser and a wardrobe specialist. About 400 pictures were taken; five poses were finally selected.

The photo session was in April, but the ad did not appear until June. Since then the photos have been used separately and in combination many times in trade publications and magazines like Southern Living.

Will Delta flight attendant Nancy April Marchman become a famous model? She laughingly answers:

"Well, I haven't thought a lot about that, but the ads have been fun for me and my family (meaning her mother, Mrs. Charles R. Marchman, and her brother, Richard, who is a 1977 graduate of the college).

"Before I saw any of the ads," she says, "a lady called me over to her seat and asked me my name. When I told her, she pulled out the magazine, pointed to the picture and said, 'Are you this Nancy?'" on various aspects of conservation," McGee explains. "I teach a major unit on pollution, especially as it relates to gas and oil. The students really pay attention to that since so much of their livelihood depends on petroleum." Another classroom favorite is a study of extinct animals.

Isn't that the way stars are born?

Competition at the regional level required that McGee add a ten-minute slide show and a booklet of her students' work to her presentation package. Her newspaper/photography experience proved very handy.

McGee is proud of the conservation award, but nothing makes her prouder than seeing a student succeed. "Receiving awards is not that important to me," she says. "I prefer the small victories in my classroom." Obviously there have been a lot of those.

Brenda and Gerald McGee and their son, Thomas, live at 1202 Clearview Dr., Allen, Texas 75002.

He adds: "When it rains, the road turns into a river and travel ceases. That's just a fact of life." Therefore, life must be self-sufficient. Even building tools are handmade, although at the settlement, chain saws have replaced the slash-and-burn method of site clearing.

After a long, hot day the Pughs could take a modern shower—modern only when compared to river-bathing. The outdoor, privy-style shower was fed by a rain barrel overhead. "That was the coldest water," Ruth says with a shiver of recollection.

"I was so desperate for a warm bath at one point that I heated water over an open fire," Jeff confesses. More precious than hot water is toilet paper. "It's worth more than gold," Ruth says with a laugh.

Sleeping dorm-style on pallets on the floor requires yards of protective mosquito netting. "Jungle insects are prolific and dangerous," Jeff explains. He was particularly fearful of a common skin-boring parasite that causes deep infection and pain. "There's no way to prevent infestation," he says. "You just hope it doesn't happen." It's simply another risk involved in tropical forest life.

Getting out of Bolivia was probably the greatest risk of all. The Pughs' group was scheduled to depart a few days before the American drug sweep. "I read about the plans for the raid in a Bolivian newspaper three days before the Americans landed," Jeff says. "I suspect the cocaine dealers knew weeks before." While natives in the little 'coke villages' are generally suspicious of North Americans and Europeans, tensions were really heightened, according to Pugh. It was definitely not a good time to be an American traveling in Bolivia, and yet getting out was close to impossible because of the Bolivian airline strike.

Air travel within the country virtually ceased. Traveling by bus to La Paz would have taken a week or more, if the bus made it. The first available means of air travel was by way of a private meat cargo plane leaving a nearby village. By pleading and outright bribery, eight of the 13 group members were able to ride in the plane, which did not contain seats. Ruth was one of the eight; Jeff was not. "I couldn't go because the legs of a cow were more valuable," he says.

"We decided one of us had to get out so our children would have at least one parent," Ruth adds very seriously. To do that, she literally sat amidst freshly slaughtered, unwrapped meat piled in the middle of the plane. Jeff was able to bribe his way onto an overloaded military transport plane a day later.

Now months later, Jeff is settled in his office in Mooney and Ruth, in Carlton Building. Bolivia, however, is never far from their thoughts.

"I think people like the Caufields are the real peacemakers in this world," Ruth says. "They offer values that endure; they offer hope."

And from Jeff: "I received another perspective on the world I live in, and a measure of the human spirit that I've never had before."

For the Pughs, Henri Nouwen's recognition of the spiritual connection between North and South America is an undeniable truth.

routes, figure out "tube" changes. They don't sit fuming in rush hour traffic jams; they get squashed in the tube as thousands of London clerks go to and from work. They learn to schedule their trips and allow for travel time.

But the compensations are terrific. Weekends can be spent in Scotland, Amsterdam or France. The October class break left not an Elon student in London. Instead, they were lying on the beaches of the Mediterranean, exploring northern Africa, or backpacking through Europe—hopping on and off trains and sleeping in youth hostels.

In between there are one-day excursions to England's famous cities and historic sites: Canterbury, Oxford, Brighton, Bath, Dover, Stonehenge, Windsor, York and on and on. "There's so much to do!" is a constant refrain. London itself overwhelms one with opportunities: Cathedrals, palaces, parks, museums, shops, flea markets, concerts, ballet, the theater—and that staple of British life, the pub. Be it the one on the corner or the one across town offering a band, the pub is the place to go. "Why stay home and watch 'The Secret Life of the Field Mouse' on BBC?" the students join their fellow Londoners in asking.

Is there ever time for study? "There has to be," says Faith Uhar of Cheverly, Maryland. "The professors assign a lot of reading and papers to write, but our classes meet only once a week so we have time to get it done."

English professors are unaccustomed to relying on a single text for a course, says Mick Ryan, senior lecturer in politics at London's Thames Polytechnic, who teaches political science to the Elon students. They prepare reading lists instead.

For the Elon class, Ryan has used a combination of the two methods. He enjoys teaching the students, who are quite different from his British pupils. "British students just sit there taking notes and looking surly," he jokes, displaying the sense of humor that makes him popular. "But the Americans speak right up. Any exchange between professor and student is rare during a typical British lecture."

The threat of terrorism, which has frightened many Americans into staying home, does not seem as real to the Elon students in London as it did before they left.

"The English think Americans are crazy not to come here," said one student. "The newspapers were full of the news of the Paris street bombs (in September), but it didn't seem to affect anyone's plans. Everything went on as usual."

In mid-December, the Elon group will be boarding a plane for the long trans-Atlantic flight home. Their bags will be bulging with souvenirs—pictures, journals, clothes, chocolates, Gucci bags, Italian shoes, Scottish sweaters—and they will have memories to last a lifetime.

But there will be something more, too. "I see my hometown and Elon College in a different light now," said one female student. "The U.S. is not all there is. We're part of a very big world full of many, many different kinds of people. When I go back home, I'll have a new perspective."
